INTRODUCTION.

JOHAN AUBREY Esq., of Easton Piers in the Parish of Kington St. Michael, if not the first to conceive the idea of a Topographical History of his native County, was certainly the earliest Collector for that purpose whose materials are known to have been preserved. On the principle of division of labour, as described by himself at the beginning of his Preface, he undertook the Northern part: but his colleagues failing to redeem their promises of co-operation, he was left to pursue his researches alone, and so by degrees extended them generally throughout the County. Between the years 1659 and 1670 he personally examined the Parish Churches, made notes of the memorials then to be seen in them, and being a frequent visitor at the houses of the gentry, he also gleaned upon those occasions such information as hall-windows or family traditions were able to supply. The result of his labours forms the Text of the present Volume.

That Aubrey adopted statements too easily upon credit is an old complaint against him. The truth is that he wrote down what he was told, without having at the moment any means of sifting it, and afterwards either forgot or neglected to do so. But he was, upon the whole, not a bad observer of things: and though he may have collected rather indiscriminately, still he has certainly been the means of preserving, in his various Manuscripts, a great number of curious facts and memoranda which otherwise would never have been known again. John Evelyn¹ alluding to Aubrey's "History of Surrey" has done him justice: and a later Authority,² in an Article upon the youth of Milton, after verifying, by incidental testimony in that Poet's writings, some notes of Milton's early biography which Aubrey had made in his "Lives of Eminent Men," generously says: "For this and many like treasures of literary gossip, we account Aubrey, despite his love of ghosts and wonderful accidents, among the benefactors of mankind."

Pecuniary troubles having compelled him to sell his Wiltshire property in 1671, he became a homeless man, and passed the latter years of his life chiefly in or about London, seldom revisiting his native county. His Wiltshire Collections were never completed. He had at first intended to place them in the hands of Anthony Wood: but being unhandsomely treated by that Antiquary, he changed his mind, and "reposited" the Manuscript in the Ashmolean Museum, then recently founded.

In the Dedication of his "Miscellanies" in 1696 (the year before his death) to James, 1st Earl of Abingdon, he says: "It was my intention to have finished my 'Description of Wiltshire,' half finished already, and to have dedicated it to your Lordship. But my age" (about 70 years)³ "is now too far spent for such undertakings. I have therefore devolved that Task on my country-man Mr. Thomas Tanner, who hath youth to go through with it, and Genius proper for such an undertaking."

The future Bishop of St. Asaph and author of the "Notitia Monastica," a native of East or Market Lavington in this County, was at the close of Aubrey's life engaged in assisting Bishop Gibson with Wiltshire information, for a New Edition of Camden's Britannia. Aubrey's papers had been already lent to him in 1693,¹ and in returning them to their author, Tanner writes² that he "had collected above 100 sheets towards completing them." It is believed that all the materials prepared by Tanner were absorbed in Bishop Gibson's work.³

Aubrey's Collections, when first consigned to the Museum at Oxford, consisted of Two Volumes, marked on the side "Hypomnemata Antiquaria A," and "B." Of these, "Liber A" only is now to be found. "Liber B" was borrowed from the Library in 1703, a few years after John Aubrey's death, by his brother William, and unfortunately was never restored.⁴

The "Volume A," (lately transferred to the Bodleian Library,) consists of Two Parts, bound together. It is of small folio size, in Aubrey's own hand-writing, and is interspersed with coloured shields of Arms, inscriptions, copies of deeds, and a few rude outlines, apparently from memory, of ancient houses. Under the titles of the several parishes he appears to have simply registered facts or remarks relating to each, as he met with them. There is no appearance of further method or disposition: so that his own apology for the chaotic state in which he left another of his Manuscripts (the History of Surrey) might have been equally well made for that of Wiltshire. "My papers are like Sibyllina Folia. I shall not take the pains to digest them in better order, which would require the drudgery of another transcribing; and now I set things down tumultuarily, as if tumbled out of a sack, as they come to hand."

Notwithstanding their disorder and rudimentary character, Aubrey's gleanings are now of considerable value, simply on account of their age. During an interval of 200 years, time and neglect have produced their usual effects. Of what Aubrey saw and has recorded, a great part has long since utterly perished; and for the mere fact of its ever having existed at all, we are indebted to such of his "Sibylline leaves" as were prudently stitched together in Volume A.

For the graver purposes of regular Topography, it may perhaps be considered that a selection of the more important parts would have been sufficient. But in a work which professes to describe things as they were two centuries ago, more particularly in one withdrawn unfinished from Aubrey's anvil, it is not very easy to say what may or may not be rejected. Although from sources that have since been laid open it may be in our power to correct many of his statements, still there are other instances in which, the original memorials having perished, it is no longer possible to pronounce with certainty how far he is right or wrong.

That many of his remarks do not at first sight appear to be very important, is undoubtedly true. But for retaining them it may be some excuse to say that he was the first, and for a long time the only collector for Wiltshire; and that almost any notices of days long past are better than no notices at all. It does however so happen that even Aubrey's hearsay anecdotes, though resting on no higher authority than that of "the parish clerk's wife" or "old Hughes the gunsmith," and in themselves of no extraordinary value, have occasionally been found to contain some local allusion, suggestive of enquiry, and capable of being traced to a real result.

It is also only fair to remember that his Manuscript makes no sort of pretension to the dignity of a County History. It is literally nothing more than the rough original note-book of a somewhat miscellaneous Collector, either too fond of his own crop to hoe it himself, or, as he says in one of his Letters, "surprised by age" before he had time to do so. Last of all, failing any great importance in his matter, Aubrey's mere language is amusing: the quaintness of the telling is often compensation enough for the insignificance of the thing told. For these reasons it has been thought better to print the whole, and to let Aubrey give us his stories in his own way. Instead of pilfering his information, and using it in some other shape, it is more just to produce the Collector himself "in his habit, as he lived" and wrote. His native county which he loved so well, which he took so much trouble to serve, and in which he and his oddities of thought and speech have always been indulgently received, would resent the appearance of the Father of Wiltshire History in any other costume than his own.

But the costume, though not altered, required to be properly adjusted. The sentences in the original Manuscript, having been (as already mentioned) entered just as they "came to hand," refer of course first to one thing, then to another. A memorandum about the Church is followed by another about the Manor; then comes the Church again, or any thing else, as the case may be. Facts of later, stand before others of earlier date: and so on. In re-arranging the paragraphs and in short, the entire Manuscript, the Editor has only done what Aubrey himself—"potuit, si non prius ipse perisset"—might have done, had he lived, and conquered his dislike to the "drudgery of another transcribing." The Hundreds, and under them the Parishes, are now presented alphabetically.¹

In the next place, some occasional additions were absolutely necessary, even to the Text itself. Aubrey's pen was apt to slip: he left numerous blanks, and was unable to give names to many of the coats of Arms. The reader will be so good as to understand, that throughout the Volume, (Aubrey's Preface excepted, where nothing was required), all that is placed within brackets is not in the original Text.

The "Mem." or "Quære" continually recurring, was intended as a signal to catch the attention of the Antiquary's brother William Aubrey; who still remained at Kington St. Michael, and was looked upon as a sort of provincial agent, charged with the duty of filling up gaps, whenever the Volume might happen to reach his hands.

It will be observed by reference to the Plates, that by far the greater part of Aubrey's Illustrations are Heraldic. This may perhaps be pronounced to be not the least useful part of his work. For the truth is, that upon the more serious labours of Parochial History—the long investigation of evidences, the thoughtful comparison of them, and the drawing of correct conclusions from them—Aubrey was either unable or unwilling to enter.² Yet, by preserving, as he did, drawings of the Arms still in his days to be seen on the windows or walls of churches and houses,

² "I would willingly, before I leave England, finish the 'Perambulation of Wilts'" (the present Manuscript) "which is more than half done. In a fortnight or 3 weeks I could do it—the country part. The Records will keepe cold." To A. Wood, October 27th, 1671, MS. Letter.

his industry has been of considerable service in providing others with a clue to research. Arms and quarterings on nameless memorials of stone or glass, are not only useful, but (if accurately copied) unerring indications of local or family history, where other information fails. Aubrey may not have been always quite accurate, but—"Est aliquid, memori visa notare manu"—it is something to have copied at all. On the other hand, to correct him on these points, is neither easy nor always safe. For his drawings frequently differ from his verbal descriptions of them: and if, in order to decide between the two, the place is visited, either the shield is found, in most cases, to have vanished altogether, or the Arms have been unskilfully re-touched, which makes the confusion greater than before. Authentic parochial history, where it could be had, has cleared up some of the difficulties: and whenever this has been so precise as to leave no manner of doubt, Aubrey has been corrected, or his blanks supplied, without hesitation. But where any doubt remains, his drawings are simply given in the Plates, as he left them.

That he, or indeed any person, not knowing the particular history of a parish or its ancient families, should fall into error, is not at all surprising. In Heraldry, two coats belonging to totally different families, are often very nearly alike; and distinctions, at all times apt to be overlooked, become entirely effaced in course of years upon decayed and weather-worn stone or glass. Even if not effaced, it is not always easy to detect them. "Dim days" (sometimes complained of in the following pages), height from the ground, the smallness of the shields themselves, the chilly atmosphere of an old country-church, and the hurry of a chance visit, are obstacles to accuracy, with which all church-note takers are familiar.

In correcting and identifying these valuable relics of Wiltshire family history, the Editor has fortunately had the benefit of a coadjutor, whose well-known qualifications for the task are only exceeded by the kind cordiality of his services. For which, as well as for patient assistance in revising the sheets whilst passing through the Press, his thanks are most sincerely given to the Rev. EDWARD WILTON of West Lavington. For the very great care and preciseness with which the corrected drawings have been executed, his acknowledgements are also most gladly made to another Wiltshire-man, Mr. EDWARD KITE of Devizes.

The excellent Plate which forms the Frontispiece, (engraved from a drawing of his own, as mentioned in page 101), was kindly lent by WILLIAM TWOPENY Esq. of Upper Grosvenor Street, London.

Within such limits as Notes allow, and confining himself (with a few exceptions) to the places mentioned by Aubrey, the Editor has endeavoured to supply the most material points of Manorial History, so far as he has been able to discover it. And whatsoever the Volume contains, will it is hoped be easily found by the help of the various Indexes, which have been made as copious as possible.

That in a work of this kind, embracing so large a number of parishes, names, facts and dates, there should be occasional oversights and mistakes, is to be, and is, expected. To avoid these upon all occasions is utterly impossible. The Editor will be extremely obliged to any of his readers who will be so kind as to communicate errors to him, and he will take care that the corrections shall not be lost.

It only remains to be added that the entire responsibility of the present Publication has been voluntarily and liberally undertaken by the WILTSHIRE ARCHÆOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

AN ESSAY TOWARDS THE
WILTSHIRE
BY ME
JOHN AWBREY OF EASTON PIERSE.

"...data sunt ipsis quoque fata Sepulchris." Juv. Sat. x.

"Vanitas vanitatum et omnia vanitas." Eccl. I.

"Et sæpe in tumultis sine corpore nomina legi." Ovid. Met. xi. fab. 10.

"One generation passeth and another Generation succeedeth, but the ^[freehold] earth abideth for ever." (Eccl. 1. 4.)

"Mors etiam saxis nominibusque venit."

 Let these two Volumes of Antiquities of Wilts be Dedicated to my singular good Lord the Rt. Honble. James Earle of Abingdon.²

✂ See what signe North Wilts is under by observation of remarkable Accidents. I should guesse it to be under Capricorn: as also is Oxford.

² The Manor of West Lavington formerly belonged (under the See of Sarum) to Sir John Dauntsey. His grand-daughter Elizabeth was second wife to Sir John Danvers the Regicide. Anne Danvers, second daughter, (becoming a coheirress on the death of her brother Henry s. p.), married Sir Henry Lee, of Ditchley, Oxon. Eleanor, eldest daughter and coheirress of Sir H. Lee, married James Bertie, first Earl of Abingdon, who thus became seated at West Lavington. At his House there (of which a small part only remains), Aubrey found shelter in adversity. He also dedicated his "Miscellanies" to the same Nobleman, who died 1699.

- ¶ Sir Robert Long hath the Legier Book of Priory St. Mary's now in the Parish of Kington St. Michael's.
- ¶ Col. Wm. Eyre of Neston in Cosham Parish hath the Legier Book of the Family of Tropnell of Neston. It is an excellent booke: in parchment, well writt, and retrieves the ancient and extinct families of this North Division.
- ¶ Sir Edward Harley Kt. of Bath, of Brampton Bryan in Herefordshire, hath a most noble Legier Booke of the great Mortimer E. of March. I believe there is not the like in England. It is a huge Folio in parchment well writt. He had land in most parts of England. By this might have been cleared the great controversy between the E. of Salisbury and the Bordering, about Chase. The Border map [?] has 100 sheets of paper.
- ¶ Sir John Talbot hath the Legier Book of Lacock. In Bibliotheca Cottonianâ is a MS. called "Chronicon" [name effaced in MS.]
- ¶ Quære of the Heires of Sir Pexhall Brocas in Berks and cestershire for the Legier Book of Bradstoke Abbey.
- ¶ Mr. Thomas Hawles of Sar: hath the Legier Book of Hospital near Wilton.
- ¶ Mr. John Sheldon of Bewley hath a gallant Legier Book of the Abbey of Glastonbury, called "Secretum Domini."—"Secretum Domini" doth properly belong to the Arundelian Library, but was lent to somebody and lost, and afterwards found with other old papers in St. Clement's Danes Tower. In the Warres,—Sheldon, Esq., bought it in Milford Lane together with Mr. Vincent's Visitation.
- ¶ Mr. Wm. Bayliff of Mounekton near Chippenham hath the Legier Book of Malmsbury Abbey. And another MS. in folio relating to the same Monastery.
- ¶ Sir John Lowe of Shaftsbury hath the Legier book — a copie of it — of the Abbey of Shaftsbury.
- ¶ The Legier Book of the Abbey of Abingdon is in the hands of Mr. Berry of Culham nr. Abingdon.
- ¶ Judge Morton hath the Legier book of Winchcombe Abby in Gloucth.
- ¶ The Legier book of the Abby of Cirencester, with Sr. Wm. Masters.
- ¶ Major John Morgan of Worminster nr. Welles, Som^t., hath a (MS ?) in folio wh. speaks of the Knights Fees of Glaston.
- ¶ The Judiciary Records of the Tower are but Duplicates of the Records of the Chamberlain's office.
- ¶ For the Legier Booke of Stanly Abby. Qy. if Sir Edw. Baynton has it.

¹ "Antiquarian Materials," Records, &c. The reader will find in "Collectanea Topographica et Genealogica" an elaborate List of Monastic Cartularies at present existing, or which are known to have existed since the dissolution of Religious Houses, together with information where they are now deposited, (so far as known). See that work, Vol. I. pp. 73-79, 197-208, 399-405, and Vol. II. pp. 102-114, 400.

THE PREFACE.¹

AT a Meeting of Gentlemen at the Devises for choosing of Knights for the Shire in March 1659, it was wished by some that this County wherein are many observeable Antiquities, were surveyed in imitation of Mr. Dugdale's Illustration of Warwickshire: but it being too great a Taske for one man, Mr. Wm. Yorke (Counsellor at Lawe and a Lover of this kind of Learning) advised to have the Labour divided. He himselfe would undertake the middle Division. I would undertake the North. T. Gore, Esq. Jeffrey Daniel, Esq. and Sir Jo. Erneley would be assistants. Judge Nicholas was the greatest Antiquary as to Evidences that this County hath had in memory of man: and had taken Notes in his Adversaria, of all the auncient Deedes that came to his hands.* Mr. Yorke had taken some Memdums in this kind too. Both now dead. T'is pitie that those papers shoulde fall into the merciless hands of woemen, and be put under pies.²

• Who had those Adversaria? Ask Capt.
Chaloner and Mr. Hulbert of Cosham his son-in-law for 'em.

But this good design vanished in fumo Tabaci, [over their tobacco pipes], and was never thought of since. I have, since that, occasionally made this following Collection which perhaps may some time or other fall into some Antiquarie's hands to make a handsome worke of it. I hope my worthy friend Mr. Anthony Wood of Oxford will be the man. I am heartily sorry I did not sett down the Antiquities of these parts sooner, for since the time aforesaid many things are irrecoverably lost.

² Mr. Yorke was of Basset's Down. Thos. Gore, Esq. of Alderton died 1684. He was an amateur herald and antiquary to whom Aubrey often refers under the initials T. G. Jeffrey Daniel was of St. Margaret's, Marlborough. Sir John Ernely of Whetham near Calne was Chancellor of the Exchequer I. James 2. Robert Nicholas of Roundway near Devizes was a Baron of the Exchequer. Anne his daughter married Thomas Hulbert of Corsham, the person to whom Aubrey refers in the marginal note. For Capt. Chaloner, see Wilts Archæol. Mag. vi. 135.

In former daies the Churches and great houses hereabout did so abound with monuments and things remarqueable that it would have deterred an Antiquarie from undertaking it. But as Pythagoras did guesse at the vastnesse of Hercules' stature by the length of his foote, so among these Ruines are Remaynes enough left for a man to give a guesse what noble buildings, &c. were made by the Piety, Charity, and Magnanimity of our Forefathers.

"And as in prospects wee are there pleased most,
Where something keeps the eie from being lost,
And leaves us roome to guesse;" [Sir John Suckling.]

so here, the eie and mind is no lesse affected with these stately ruines than they would have been when standing and entire. They breed in generous mindes a kind of pittie; and sett the thoughts a-worke to make out their magnificence as they were when in perfection. These Remaynes are "tanquam tabulata naufragii" (like fragments of a Shipwreck) that after the Revolution of so many yeares and governments have escaped the teeth of Time and [which is more dangerous] the hands of mistaken zeale. So that the retrieving of these forgotten things from oblivion in some sort resembles the Art of a Conjuror who makes those walke and appeare that have layen in their graves many hundreds of yeares: and represents as it were to the eie, the places, customs and Fashions, that were of old Time. It is said of Antiquaries, they wipe off the mouldinesse they digge, and remove the rubbish.

Let us imagine then what kind of countrie this was in the time of the Ancient Britons. By the nature of the soil, which is a sour woodsere land, very natural for the production of oakes especially, one may conclude that this North Division was shady dismal wood: and the inhabitants almost as savage as the Beasts whose skins were their only rayment. The language British, which for the honour of it was in those dayes spoken from the Orcades to Italie and Spain. The Boats on the Avon (wh. signifies River) were basketts of twigges covered with an oxe skin:

which the poore people in Wales use to this day. They call them curricles. Within this Shire I believe that there were several RĒGULI which often made war one upon another: and the great Ditches which run on the plaines and elsewhere so many miles were [not unlikely] their boundaries: and withall served for defence against the incursions of their enemies, as the Pict's Wall, Offa's Ditch: and that in China, to compare things small to great. Their Religion is at large described by Cæsar. Their priests were the Druids: some of their Temples I pretend to have restored, as Aubury, Stonehenge, &c., as also British sepulchres. Their waie of fighting is lively sett down by Cæsar. Their camps with their way of meeting their antagonists I have sett down in another place. They knew the use of Iron; and about Hedington fields, Bromham, Bowden, &c., are still plowed up cinders, the Scoria of melted iron.¹ (In Herefordshire, towards Monmouthshire, are many old Roman cinders found; which they use in their Blomerries now to make their oare runne the better). They were 2 or 3 degrees I suppose less salvage than the Americans. Till K. John's time wolves were in this Island: and in our grandfather's dayes more Foxes than now, and Marterns (a beast of brown rich Furre) at Stanton Parke, &c.: the race now extinct thereabout.

The Romans subdued and civilized them. At Lackham, Mr. Camden saith was a Colonie of them, as appears by the Roman coine found there. About 1654 in Week-field in the Parish of Hedington digging up the ground deeper than the plough went, they found for a great way together, foundations of howses, hearthes, coles, and a great deal of Romane Coine, silver and brasse; whereof I had a pint: some little copper pieces no bigger than silver halfpence—quære, if they were not the Roman Denarii. The pott in which a good deale was found, I had. I presented it to the Royal Society's Repositorie: it resembles an apprentice's earthen Christmas boxe. At Sherston hath severall times been found Roman Money in ploughing. I have one silver piece found there not long since [1653], of Constantine the Great.

Among other arts, that of Architecture was introduced by them, and no doubt but here as well as in other parts were then good buildings, here being so good stone. I know not any vestige now left in this County, except the fragment of the Castle of Sarisbury: which takes its name from Cæsar: Cæ-sar's burghus, from whence Sarisburgh, whence Salisbury: R being often changed into L. At Bath are severall Roman Inscriptions, which Mr. Camden hath sett down, and by the West Gate a piece of a delicate Corinthian freeze which he calls "wreathed leaves," not understanding Architecture; and by, a bass relieve of an Ophiouchus. At Bathford about 1663 was found a grotto paved with mosaïque work.

[Mem. We find in England, never an Elme to grow naturally in a wood, as oakes, ashes, &c. This consideration made me reflect that they were exotique: but by whom brought into England? By the Saxons they could not: for upon enquiry they tell me none there, nor in Denmark, nor yet in France: therefore neither by the Danes, nor French. But in Italie they are naturally, e.g. Lombardie, &c. Therefore they were brought by the Romans, who were great improvers, and had great skill in husbandrie, as we see by Columella.]

The Britons received the knowledge of husbandrie from the Romans: the foot and the acre which we yet use is the nearest to them. In our west country [and I believe so in the north] they give no wages to the shepherd, but he has the keeping so many sheep with his Master's flock. Plautus hints at this in his Asinaria, Act. iii. Scene i. l. 36.

"Etiam opilio, qui pascit, mater, alienas oves, Aliquam habet peculiarem, quâ spem soletur suam."¹

The Saxons succeeded them, and driving them away to Ireland, Cornwall, &c., these Roman Britaines left here:—(for they used the best of them in their warres, being their best soldiers). Here was a mist of ignorance for 600 yeares. They were so far from knowing Arts that they could not build wall with stone. The Church of Glaston was thatched.

They lived sluttishly in poor howses, where they ate a great deale of beefe and mutton, and dranke good Ale in a brown mazard: and their very kings were but a sort of Farmers. After the Christian Religion was planted here it gave a great shoote; and the Kings and great men gave vast revenues to the Church who were ignorant enough in those days. The Normans then came and taught them civility and building; which though it was Gothique as also their Policy (Feudalis lex), yet they were magnificent. For the Government, till the time of H. 8., it was like a Nest of Boxes: for Copy-holders, (who till then, were Villaines) held of the Lords of the Manor, who held of a superior Lord, who held perhaps of another superior Lord or Duke, who held of the King. Upon any occasion of Bustling in those dayes, one of the great Lords sounded his Trumpet [all Lords then kept Trumpeters, even to King James] and summoned those that held under them: those again sounded their Trumpets, and so on downwards to the Copy holders. Old Sir Walter Long, grandfather to Colonel Long, kept a Trumpeter: and rode with xxx servants and retainers to Marleborough (Sessions?) and so for others of his ranke in his time.

The Court of Wards was a great bridle in those days.

A great part of this Division held of the Honour of Trowbridge, where is a ruined Castle of the Dukes of Lancaster. No younger brothers then were by the custom and constitution of the Realme to betake themselves to Trade: but were churchmen, or retayners and servants to great men: rid good horses, (now and then tooke a purse) and their Blood that was bred of the good Tables of their Masters, was upon every occasion freely lett out in their quarrells. It was then too common amongst their Masters to have Feuds with one another, and their servants, at market, or where they met (in that slashing age) did commonly bang one another's bucklers. Then an Esquire when he rode to Towne, was attended by 8 or 10 men in blew coates with badges. The Lords (then Lords in deed as well as in Title) lived in their countries like petty Kings, had jura regalia belonging to their signories, had their Castles and Burroughes, and sent Burghesses to the Lower House: had Gallows within their Liberties where they could try, condemne, hang, and drawe.

[At Combe, a Gallows were standing within these 50 years. At Tormarton in Gloucestershire anciently the seate of Rivers, (then St. Loe by match) is a Dungeon about 13 or 14 foote deepe of good ashler worke. About 4 foot high are iron rings fastened into the wall, which was probably to tye offending Villaines, as anciently all Lords of Mannors had this power over their Villaines, and had all of them no doubt sure places for their punishment. To ascend higher to Seignories; all Castles have dungeons: and I believe so had Monasteries, for they have within themselves power of life and death; witnesse the poor monke at — in France that upon complaint of his friends to the Bishop, had him pluckt out, but his feet and hands rotten, and shortly after died, 1663.] The Lords of Mannors never went to London but in Parliament time, or once a yeare to do their homage and duty to the King. They kept good howses in their countries, did eate in their great Gothique Halls, at the High Table, or Oreile,^a the folke at the side Tables. The meate was served up by Watch words. Jacks are but an invention of the other age. The poor boyes did turn the spitts, and lickt the dripping pan, and grew to be huge lusty knaves. The beds of the servants and retayners were in the great Halls, as now in the Guard Chamber, privy chamber, &c.^b

“A neat built chapel and a spacious Hall
Were all the Roomes of Note: the rest were small.”

The hearth was commonly in the middle, as at most colleges, whence the saying “Round about our coale fire.” Aunciently, till about the Reformation, ordinary men’s houses had no chimneys, but Flues, like Louver holes: some of them were in being when I was a boy. Here in the Halls were the Mummings, cob-loaf stealing, and great number of old Xtnas plaies performed. Every Baron and Gentleman of Estate kept great horses for a man at Armes: Lords had their Armouries to furnish some hundreds of men. The Halls of Justices of the Peace were dreadful to behold. The Skreenes were garnished with corsletts and helmetts gaping with open mouth: with coates of mail, lances, pikes, halberts, brown bills, batterdashers,¹ bucklers,

^a Oreile is an eare, but here it signifies a little Roome at the upper end of the Hall where stands a square or round table: perhaps in old time was an oratorie. In every old Gothique Hall hereabout is one, as at Draycot, Lekham, Alderton, &c.

^b “In Scotland still the Architecture of a Lord’s Howse is this, viz., a great open Hall, a Kitchen, and Buttery, a Parlour, over which a Chamber for my Lord and my Lady; all the rest lye in common: viz., the Menservants in the Hall, the women in a common room. From Sir Christopher Wren.” [This is printed in Curll’s copy, but is not in the Oxford MS. Ed.]

¹ Aubrey uses this word again, and also gives a rough drawing of the weapon, in his MS. account of Stonehenge, (‘Monumenta Britannica’ MS.) “The Duke of Buckingham in 1620 did cause the

and the moderne colivers and petronells, (in King Charles the First's time) turned into Musketts and Pistolls. Then were entails in fashion (a good prop for Monarchie). Destroying of petty Mannors began in H. 7. to be now common: whereby the meane people lived lawlesse, nobody to govern them, they cared for nobody, having on nobody any dependence; and thus, and by the selling the Church landes, is the Ballance of the Government quite altered, and putt into the handes of the common people. No Ale house nor yet Innes then, unlesse upon great Roades. When they had a minde to drinke, they went to the Friaries: and when they travelled they had entertainment at the Religious Howses for 3 dayes, if occasion so long required. The Meeting of the Gentry was not held at tippling howses; but in the Fields or Forests with their Horses and Howndes, with their Bugle horns in silken bawdricks. This part very much abounded with Forests and Parkes. Thus were good Spiritts kept up: and good horses and good riders made. Whereas now, the Gentry of the Nation is so effeminated by Coaches, they are soe far from managing great horses that they know not how to ride hunting horses: besides the spoyling of several trades dependant. In the last age, every gentlemanlike man, (yeoman) kept a sparrow-hawk. A Priest, I thinke, kept a Hoby. And it was a divertisement for young gentlewomen to manne sparrow-hawkes and merlins. In Henry 6. time, one Dame Juliana Berners writt the Art of Hawking, in English verse: (it is in Wilton library). This country was then a lovely campania, as that about Sherston and Coteswold. Very few enclosures, unlesse near howses. My Grandfather Lyte did remember when all between Cromhall's (Eston) and Castle Combe was so, when Easton, Yatton, and Combe did intercommon together. In my remembrance much hath been enclosed, and every year more and more is taken middle of Stonehenge to be digged: and they found a great many horns of Stags and oxen, charcoal, batter-dashes, heads of arrows, some pieces of armour eaten out with rust, and rotten bones." Sir R. C. Hoare says, "I cannot make out what kind of thing is meant, but in the rude sketch which Aubrey gives, it resembles the instrument made use of for churning butter." [Anc. Wilts i. 154]. It was probably some war-club, like the crest of the Bathurst family.

A Batterdash.

in. Anciently the Leghs (now corruptly called Sleights),¹ i.e., pastures, were noble large grounds as yet the Demesne lands at Castle Combe are. So likewise in his remembrance was all between Kington St. Michael and Dracot Cerne common field. Then were a world of labouring people maintayned by the plough as yet in Northamptonshire, &c. There were no rates for the poore even in my gr. father's daies: but for Kington St. Michael (no small parish) the Church Ale at Whitsuntide did their businesse. In every Parish is, or was, a church howse, to which belonged spitts, crocks, &c., utensils for dressing provision.² Here the Howsekeepers met, and were merry and gave their Charitie: the young people came there too, and had dancing, bowling, shooting at buttes, &c., the ancients sitting gravely by, looking on. All things were civill and without scandall. This Church Ale is doubtless derived from the Agapæ or Love Feasts mentioned in the N. T. Mr. A. Wood assures me that scarcely any Almehouses before the Reformation.^a That over against Christchurch, Oxon, one of the ancientest. In every Church was a poore man's boxe; but I never remembred the use of it. Nay, there was one at Great Innes. I remember it before the warres. Before the Reformation, at their Vigills or Revells they sate up all night fasting and praying the night before the Dedication of the Church:^b certain officers were chosen for gathering the money

^a See Statute of Elizabeth for erecting Hospitalls.

^b [Aubrey probably intended to add something about Churches being built East and West, as he has here the following marginal Mem. Ed.] "Capt. Silas Taylor says that they took that Point of the Horizon where the Sun arose for the East, which makes that variation. That few are true except those built about the two Equinoxes: and in those days the compasse was not known. I have experimented some churches and find the Lyne to point to that part of the horizon where y^e Sun rises that day of that Saint to whom the church is dedicated: e.g. at Hothfield."

² In many parishes in Wiltshire there is still to be met with some old house called "The Church House," where this took place. The correctness of Aubrey's account is confirmed by old Parish Books. Those of Wimborne Minster in Dorsetshire, for instance, contain for a great many years regular items of "Ales at Lent and Whitsuntide." "Paid for Treen dishes." "Hogsheads and butts for ale at the Church House." "Received, profits of church ale at Lent and Whitsuntide, &c."

for charitable uses.^a Old John Wastfield of Langley near Chippenham was Peterman at St. Peter's Chapell there: at which time is yet one of the greatest Revells in these parts: but the chappell converted into a dwelling Howse.¹ Such joy and merriment was every Holiday: which dayes were kept with great solemnity and reverence. These were the dayes when England was famous for the gray goose quill. The Clarke's Ale was in the Easter Holidays, for his benefitt, and the solace of the neighbourhood.

Since the Reformation and Inclosures aforesaid, these parts have swarmed with poore people. The Parish of Calne pays to the poore (1663) £500 per annum: and the Parish of Chippenham little lesse, as appears by the Poor's bookes there. Inclosures are for the private, not for the public good. For a shepherd and his dogge, or a milk mayd, can manage that land, that upon arable employed the hands of severall scores of labourers.

In those times (besides the jollities already mentioned) they had their Pilgrimages to Walsingham, Canterbury, and severall shrines hereabout; to St. Joseph of Arimathea at his Chapel in Glastonbury Abbey. In the roads thither were severall houses of entertainment built purposely for them. Among others was the howse called the Chapell of Playster near Box: and a great howse without Lafford's gate near Bristowe. Then the Crusades to the Holy Warre were most magnificent and glorious, and the rise, I believe, of the adventures of knights errant and Romances. The solemnities of Procession in and about the churches and the Perambulations in the Fields, besides their convenience, were fine diversions. The Priests went before in their Formalities singing the Latin Service, and the people came after makeing their good-meaning responses. The Reverence given to Holy men was very great. Then were the churches open all day long, men and woemen going in and out leisurely to and from their Devotions. Then were the consciences of the people kept in so great awe, by Confession, that just dealing and vertue were habituall. Sir Edwyn Sandys did observe in his Travels [Speculum Europæ] in the Catholique

^a See Bede's History. Also, 1. Kings, viii. 62. 2 Chron. vii. Nehemiah viii. 10. 11. 12.

Countries so great use of Confession as aforesaid, that though a severe enemy to the Church of Rome, he doth heartily wish it had never been left out by the Church of England: perceiving the great good it does beyond Sea. In the Halls, Parlours, &c., there were wrote Texts of Scripture: and good Sentences on the painted cloaths, which does something evidence the piety of those days more than now.

The Tablecloth was on the board all day long ready for what was to be sett thereon for Strangers, Travellers, Fryars, Pilgrims, &c.: And so t'was, I have heard my grandfather say, in his grandmother's time called Old Joane of Eston; and my honoured grandmother Mrs. Israel Lyte was also of this hospitable nature. At the Parish Priest's houses in France, especially in Languedoc, is the like.

Lent was a dismal time: strictly observed by fasting, prayer, and confessing against Easter: During the 40 days the Friars preached every day. Before the Reformation pulpits were generally stone. Severall were in my boy-hood altered. This Country was very full of Religious Howses: a man could not have travelled but he must have mett Monkes, Fryars, Bonhommes, &c., in their severall habits, black, white, and gray, &c.: and the Tingle Tangle of their convent Bells I fancie made very prettie musique, like the College bells at Oxon. "The Monkes were good chemists, and invented many good Receipts, which they imparted to their Penitents; and so are handed downe to their great grandchildren, a great many rarities." [Traditio Lampadis]. There were no Free Schooles. The boys were educated at the Monasteries. Mr. M. Lloyd saies that in Wales before the Reformation every man almost, of any fashion, could speak Latin. They learned it at the monasteries, where they spake of duty.¹ I believe the same might be said of England. The young mayds were brought up (not at Hakney, Sarum Schools, &c., to learn pride and wantonnesse, but) at the Nunneries, where they had examples of Piety, and Humility and modestie and obedience, to imitate and to practise. Here they learned needlework, the art of confectionary, surgery, (anciently no apothecaries or Surgeons—the gentlewoemen did cure their poore neighbours: their hands are now too fine—vide Sir Courtly Nice in comedie, epilogue,] physick, writing, drawing, &c. Old Jacques, (who lived where Charles Hadnam did) could see from his Howse the Nunnes of the Priory, (St. Marie's near Kington St. Michael) come forth into the Nymph-hay with their Rocks and Wheelles to spinne: and with their soweing work. He would say that he hath told threescore and ten: but of Nunnes there were not so many, but in all, with Lay Sisters, as widowes, old maydes, and young girles, there might be such a number. This was a fine way of breeding up young woemen, who are led more by example than precept; and a good retirement for widowes and grave single women to a civill, virtuous, and holy life.

Plato says that the foundation of Government is the education of youth. By this meanes it is most probable that then was a Golden Age. I have heard Judge Jenkins, Mr. Jo. Latchmere and other Lawyers say that before the Reformation one shall hardly in a yeare find an Action of the case as for Slander, &c. It was the Result of a good government. It is a sarcasm more malicious than true commonly thrown at the churchmen, that they had too much land for their Constitution, being in truth considered that they were rather administrators of these great Revenues to pious and public uses, than usu-fructuaries. As for themselves, they had only their Habit and competent Diet, every order according to the prescribed Rule, from which they were not to varie. Then, for their Tenants, their Leases were almost as good to them as Fee simple, and per chance might longer last in their Families. Sir William Button (the Father) hath often told me, that Alton Farm (£400 a year), had been held by his Ancestors from the Abbey of Winchester about 400 yeares. The Powers of Stanton Quintin held that Farm, of the Abbey of Cirencester,¹ in Lease 300 years; and my ancestors the Danverses held West Tokenham for many generations of the Abbey of Broadstock, where one of them was a Prior.² (Mem. That in the Abbies, were severall corodies granted for poore old shiftless men, which Fitzherbert speaks of amongst his Writts.) In France to every Parish Church is more than one Priest; because of the severall masses to be said; which fashion Mr. Dugdale tells me was used here.

In many chancells are to be seen 3 seats with Niches in the wall (most commonly on the South side) rising by degrees, and sometimes only 3 seats; the first being for the Bishop, 2^d for the Priest: and 3^d for the Deacon, whenever the Bishops visited their Churches in person. This from Mr. Dugdale; as also that in many churches where Stalles are, as at Cathedralls, (which I mistook for Chauntries) were Collegiate Churches. The Architecture of the Churches of the West is much better than the East of England. Mr. Dugdale told Dr. Wren and me that about Henry the Third's time, a Pope gave a Bull or Patent to a company of Italian Architects to travell up and down to build churches.

Heretofore (before H. VIII.) Glasse windowes were very rare, only used in Churches and y^e best roomes of gentlemen's howses. Even in my remembrance, before the Civil Warres, Copy holders, and ordinary poor people had none. Now, the poorest people that are upon almes, have it. In Herefordshire, Monmouth, Salop, &c., it is so still; but now [1671] are goeing up no lesse than 3 glasse-houses between Gloucester and about Worcester. So that glasse will be common over all England.

When I came to Oxford Crucifixes were common in y^e glasse in the Studies window: and in the Chamber windowes were canonized Saints: (e. g. in my chamber window, St. Gregorie the great, and another broken,) and Scutcheons, with the Pillars, y^e Whip, the Dice, and the Cock. But after 1647 they were all broken: Down went Dagon. Now no religion to be found. Without doubt before the Reformation there was no county in England but had severall Glasse-Painters. I only remember one poore one an old man, Harding at Blandford.

Mem. Anciently no Bandes worne about their neckes, but Furre, as in old glasse pictures.

Mem. Till Q. Eliz. time, no Hatts, but cappes—i. e. bonnets. Trunke hose in fashion till the latter end of K. Jas. I.

By reason of Fasting dayes, all gentlemen's howses had anciently Fishponds, and fish in y^e motes about y^e howse.

About 90 years ago (about 1580) noblemen's and gentlemen's coates were of the Fashion of the Bedells and yeomen of the guard—i. e. gathered at the girdle place. Our Bencher's gownes retayne yet that fashion of gathering.

All old Bayliff's accounts with numerall letters. Even in my remembrance when I was a boy, baylies in the country commonly used no other. The Shopkeepers anciently counted with counters: wh. is y^e best way and still used by y^e French.

I remember that before y^e late warres y^e Ministers in Herefordshire and Counties that way had y^e title of "Sir"; as y^e Bachelors of Art have at Oxford, as "Sir Richard of Stratford", "Sir William of Monkland", and so it was in Wilts when my Grandfather Lyte was a boy: and anciently every where. An example of this appears in the excellent comedie of "The Scornfull Ladie" where "Sir Roger", the Chaplain, has a great part. It was made by Mr. T. Fletcher about y^e beginning of K. James's time: but in old wills before the Reformation it is upon Record. When I was a child (and so before the Civill Warres) the fashion was for old women and mayds to tell fabulous stories nightimes, of Sprights and walking of ghosts, &c. This was derived downe from mother to daughter, &c. from y^e Monkish Ballance which upheld Holy church, for y^e Divines say, "Deny Spirits, you are an Atheist". When y^e warres came, and with them Liberty of Conscience and Liberty of inquisition, the phantoms vanished. Now children feare no such things having heard not of them; and are not checked with such feares.

Sir John Danvers told me that when he was a young man the principal reason of sending their Sons to Travels, was to weane them from their acquaintance and familiarity with the Servingmen: for then Parents were so austere and grave, that the sonnes must not be company for their Father; and some company man must have—so, contracted a familiarity with the Servingmen who got a hank upon them they ed. hardly clawe off. Nay: Parents w^d suffer their Servants to domineer over their Children, and some, in what they found their Children to take delight, in that w^d be sure to crosse them.

The use of "your Humble servant" came into England by the Marriage of Q. Mary, daughter of Hen. IV. of France; derived from "votre très humble serviteur"; and never heard of before; but "God keep you," "God be wi' ye," "How dost doe,?" with a thump on the shoulder.

Till this time the Court itself was unpolished and unmannered. King James's Court was so far from being civill to woemen, that the Ladies, nay the Queen herself, could hardly pass by the King's apartment without receiving some affront.

Before the late Civill Warres, in gentlemen's houses at Christmas time the first Dish that was brought to table was a Boare's Head with a lemmon in his mouth. At Queen's College in Oxford they still retayne this custom: the bearer of it brings it into the Hall, singing to an old tune, an old Latin Rhyme "Caput apri defero", &c.

Heretofore Noblemen and gentlemen of fair estates had their heralds who wore their coat of arms at Christmas and at other solemn times and cried "Largesse" thrice.

The first dish that was brought up to the table on Easter Day was a red herring riding away a-horseback; i. e., a herring ordered by the cook something after the likeness of a man a-horseback, set in a corner sallett.

From the time of Erasmus till about 20 years past [1536-1650], the learning was downright pedantry. The conversation and habits of those times were as starcht as their bands and square beards: and gravity was then taken for wisdom. The doctors in those days were but old boys, when quibbles past for wit, even in their sermons. The gentry and citizens had little learning of any kind, and their way of breeding of their children was suitable to the rest. They were as severe to their children as their schoolmasters; and their schoolmasters, as masters of the house of correction. The child perfectly loathed the sight of his parents as the slave his torture. Gentlemen of 30 and 40 years old were to stand like mutes and fools bareheaded before their parents; and the daughters [grown women] were to stand at the cupboard-side during the whole time of the proud Mother's visit, unless (as the fashion was) leave was desired, forsooth, that a cushion should be given them to kneel upon, brought them by the serving man, after they had done sufficient penance in standing. The boys, (I mean the young fellows), had their foreheads turned up, and stiffened with spittle: they were to stand mannerly forsooth thus: the foretop ordered as before, with one hand at the bandstring: the other behind them. The gentlewomen had prodigious fans, as is to be seen in old pictures, like that instrument which is used to drive feathers: and in it had a handle at least half a yard long: with these the daughters were oftentimes corrected. [Sir Edward Coke, Lord Chief Justice, rode the circuit with such a fan. Sir William Dugdale told me he was an eyewitness of it. The Earl of Manchester also used such a fan]. But fathers and mothers slasht their daughters in the time of their besom discipline when they were perfect woemen. At Oxford, (and I believe at Cambridge) the rod was frequently used by the Tutors and Deans. And Dr. Potter, of Trinity College, I knew right well, whipt his pupil with his sword by his side, when he came to take his leave of him to go to the Inns of Court.

This searching after Antiquities is a wearisome taske. I wish I had gone through all the Church monuments. The records at London I can search gratis. Though of all studies I take the least delight in this, yet methinks I am carried on with a kind of divine CEstrum: for nobody els hereabout hardly cares for it, but rather makes a scorn of it. But methinkes it shewes a kind of gratitude and good nature to revise the memories and memorialls of the pious and charitable Benefactors since dead and gone.

The great howse here, which with the Mannor, was lately sold by Mr. Long, of North (read South) Wraxall, about 1668, is an ancient howse and seems to be, by the great windowe, of about Edw. 3, and so the Chancel windowe.

smyth in Hen. 8. that hath the Monument, with the merry Epitaph in St. Faith's Church, in London.¹

¹ Cottle's was Atworth parva. Sir Roger de Cotele, Kt. is named in an Inquisition at Melksham in 1275. Richard Cotell "of Cotell's Atteward" married c. 1280 Isawde Tropenell of Chalfield. The "Legier Book of Tropenell at Neston," referred to by Aubrey, is unfortunately missing. See some account of it infra, under "Corsham," note on "Tropenell's Chapel." The Cotele family appear to have remained here, their names occurring as Patrons of Atworth Chapel, to 1309: and were followed by the family of Selyman. The next was that of Beaushin. (A William Beaushin had been of Bradford, Wilts, and of Beaushin in Whitchurch Canoncorum co. Dorset in 1274. Hutchins I. 329). At Atworth this family first appear as Patrons in 1401. For their Pedigree see Wilts Visit. 1565, in which year John Beaushin was "of Cottle's Atworth:" his wife being Elizabeth Eyre of Chalfield. The next owner was Lord Giles Pawlet, fourth son of the first Marquis of Winchester. He married Mary daughter and coheirress of Nicholas Trappes. This person was Henry 8th's Goldsmith. He was buried A.D. 1526, with his two wives Agnes and Joan, not at St. Faith's as Aubrey says, but in the chancel of St. Leonard's, Foster Lane. The "merry" Epitaph, as given by Weever, runs in this vein:—

" When the bells be merrily rung,
And the Masse devoutly sung,
And the meat merrily eaten,
Then shall Robert Trappes, his wives and his children be forgotten," &c.

(For more of this family see 'Trappes of Nidd,' Co. York. Burke's Landed Gentry). The son of Lord Giles Pawlett and Mary Trappes was the "old Mr. Pawlett" of Aubrey. A pedigree of this branch of Pawlett is in the Wilts Visit. 1623. In the Church is a monument to the last of the family who was buried here 2 Jan. 1700, viz.: Bernard Powlett, "son of William who was grandson of Lord Giles Powlett," with a shield of the following arms. 1. Powlett. 2. De Ros. 3. Poynings (with a crescent). 4. St. John. 5. Delamere. 6. Hussey. 7. Az. a fess between 3 fleurs de lis Or. 8. Ireby. 9. Delamore. 10. Sherington? Also one to Mrs. Jane Browne of Cottles, sister to Bernard Powlett, who at her death 26 July 1706, left a Benefaction to the parish. On her shield, a widow's lozenge, Browne, (Sable, 3 lions pass. guard. between 2 cotises A), impaling Powlett. (On her achievement which was in the church about 30 years ago the Powlett arms were on an escutcheon of pretence. There was also another achievement of the six principal quarterings of Powlett, of the Marquis of Winchester's line). The two monuments were erected by the late Mr. Hale of Alderley, Co. Gloucester, to whom the estate had descended. In 1857 it was sold by his son Robert Blagden Hale, Esq., to Charles J. T. Conolly, Esq., of Midford Castle, Bath.

The successive owners of Cottle's Atworth, as above named, were patrons of the chapel till about 1540, when for the first time it appears as annexed to the Vicarage of Bradford then late the Abbess of Shaftesbury's. With that Vicarage, Atworth chapel was granted to the Dean and Chapter of Bristol. Atworth is still parochially connected with Bradford on Avon, but in 1847 the Church, with South Wraxhall annexed, was made a Perpetual Curacy, endowed with a Vicarial Rent-charge.

BRADFORD (on Avon.)¹

This is a Market Towne; market day.....

At the end of the great barne is a hand holding a battle ax, which is the crest of Hall.² Arms of Hall. (See Plate ii. fig. 2.)

I would have the prospect taken of Mr. J. Hall's howse which is very fine.³ (See Plate I.)

In this Towne is a fair old built howse of the family of Rogers of Cannington, here are many old escutcheons, which see; now it is the seat of Mr. Methwyn, the Cloathier.⁴

On the top of the North Hill, above Mr. Methwyn's, is the finest hermitage I have seen in England; severall roomes and a very neate chapell of good freestone.⁵ This high hill is rock and gravell, faces the south and southwest, therefore is the best seate for a vineyard of any place I know; better in England cannot be.

Mr. Thomas Gore assures me that in the Church here, is nothing of antiquitie to be found.⁶

Here is a strong and handsome bridge in the midst of which is a little chapell, as at Bathe, for Masse. Mem. A little beyond the bridge is a chapell and alms-house of an old date. Q. whose donacion? ⁷

² Barton Barn. But it is doubtful whether the crest of Hall was ever there.

⁵ Perhaps 'Tory Chapel.' See Wilts. Archæol. Mag. I. 148, and Ditto V. 35.

⁷ The 'Chapel beyond the bridge' has been long since destroyed and the site is not quite certain. The 'Almshouse of old date' is also destroyed. "Hall's Almshouse," now in that part of the town, was not built till A.D. 1700, after Aubrey's death.

Mother Bloker's Prophecy, a simple one.

Bristowe shall sinke, and Bath shall swimme:
And Bradford shall be a Haven town.

¹ In a letter to Thos. Tanner (then a young man, afterwards Bishop of St. Asaph,) who was assisting Bishop Gibson with notes upon Wiltshire for a new Edition of Camden's Britannia, and had the use of Aubrey's Manuscripts for that purpose, Aubrey says, referring to this "simple" prediction, that "Mr. Sloper came in whilst I was writing about Bradford and bade me put it in, but pray doe me the favour to blott it out."

² This imperfect pedigree is on a separate leaf in the original MS., and is inserted not under 'Bradford' to which it properly belongs, but under 'Headington.' It does not appear to be in SOUTH WRAXHALL. THE CHURCH.

Over a door which opens into Long's Chapelle:

In Long's chapelle, an old altar monument of freestone, (Pl. ii. fig. 5.) on which lies a figure with a robe, but so covered with a deske as not well to be discerned; I guess it to be of a woman. In the limbe (border) are the Marshall's Locks; in the middle of the North side is an Angell holding this escutcheon, (Fig. 7.) LONG, Crusuly and a lion rampant, impaling BERKELEY quartering SEYMOUR, 2 wings inverted, supported with two lyons passant guardant, which seem to have been crowned or heaumed (i.e. helmeted) and have a neckcloath which is invecked (i.e. with its margin jagged) as low as the shoulders. The one hath on his shoulder the escutcheon of the Wings, the other that of Long. The South side (i.e. of the monument) was as the North, but now almost defaced. The windowes are all defaced of this Chapell, as also of the Church; in the East window of the Chancell is only signe of a scutcheon.²

Aubrey's hand-writing, but was probably supplied to him by one of the Rogers family, three of whom were successively Rectors of Headington, 1605, 1670, 1721. The "Mem. from Herald's Office" (which, again, seems to be in a different hand from the rest), appears to have been intended to supply a missing link: viz. George Rogers of Luppit, father of Sir Edward, but it makes the said George of Luppit brother of Thomas Rogers of Bradford, whereas other authorities call him the son. See the Pedigree printed in Rev. W. H. Jones's History of Bradford on Avon, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. V. 366—9. Also Burke's Landed Gentry, "Rogers of Rainscombe."

¹ The letters R. L. denote Sir Robert Long. The stag's head was the crest of Popham, called of North Bradley, an estate which is said to have come to Sir Robert's ancestor by an heiress of that family. The device of the "Marshal's fetterlock" (an instrument for fastening a prisoner's chain) seems to have been used by the Longs of Wraxhall, in allusion to their tenure of the Draycote estate. The Cernes of that place had used it before them. Draycote was held of the Crown by petit serjeanty, the nominal service being that of rendering every year a wand for the Third officer of the King's Marshalsea. The Long's chapel in Wraxhall Church, as well as those portions of the Old Manor House where this cognizance is found, were built before the two estates were severed by the act of Sir Walter Long who died 1610.

² The Long's Chapel is on the South side of Wraxhall Church (St. James's.) There seems to be no good reason for supposing that the back of this monument had ever been defaced, as

In the Chapell, in freestone :

"Here lieth the body of Capt. John Long, Esqr. son of John Long, Esqr. Justice of the Peace and Quorum, who departed this life in the city of Westminster, the 23rd of Febr. 1652."¹

A marble blank. In freestone: "Here lieth the body of Will: Long, Esq. who died 11 Sept. 1664."²

"Here lieth Walter Long, of South Wraxall, Gent. son of John Long, Esqr. and Justice of Peace and Quor. who dyed at East Brent, in Somerset, Oct. 11, 1669. Here lieth also, the body of Barbara his wife, who dyed Oct. 14, 1669."³

Aubrey says. Before the Chapel was built in 1566, the monument stood in the Church, with its back against the South wall, and its carved front looking northwards into the church. The back not being intended to be seen, would most probably be left rough hewn. But when the chapel came to be added, in order to make an opening into the church, that part of the South wall against which the back abutted was taken down: and the monument itself not being disturbed, the rough hewing became exposed. It was in that position—its original one, minus the wall behind it—when seen by Aubrey. And so it remained, under a wooden screen which divided the chapel from the church, until a few years ago, when the church was restored. During the alterations, the monument was removed to its present situation, the East end of Long's chapel, where it stands with the rough hewn back once more against a wall. The person to whom it was erected has not yet been identified. The figure is that of a Lady, who according to the heraldry, must have been by birth a Berkeley descended from a Seymour heiress, and by marriage a Long. The difficulty is, that there is no certain knowledge in the pedigrees of a match between a Long and a Berkeley. The tomb being in Wraxhall Church would imply that her husband was owner of this estate: the fetterlock on it, that he was also owner of Draycote. As the two were not held by one and the same owner before 1438, nor after 1610, the monument seems to belong to that interval. There is a minute enquiry into its history in Gent. Mag. June 1835: but the statement in that Article as to the way in which the Longs obtained Draycote is rectified in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. Vol. iii. 178. The charge upon the chevron on the Berkeley quartering, on this monument, appears to be 3 plates, not 3 roses. It is remarkable that the lion supporter bears the Seymour wings, and not the Berkeley shield.

"Here lieth the body of William Awbrey, late of Chaddenewych in the parish of Meer, in the County of Wilts, Esqr. who dyed Jan. 8, 1664."¹—

Another Inscription of 1649, not very legible. In this Chapell are two handsome niches, and holy-water pott.²

Chauncell:

"Here lies the body of Wm. Jones, who dyed the 18th Aug. A.D. 1660."

"Laugh not Fanaticks, though he bee gone,
He hath fought his fight, and hath won a crowne;
Though he is gone, in heaven he takes his rest,
Singing allelujah, and is for ever blest;
In life he taught to dye, and he did give
In death a great example how to live:
If wisdom, learning, knowledge, cannot dwell
Secure from change, vaine bubble earth, farewell."

In the Churchyard:

"Here lies interred under this stone
Anne, Henry Mat. . . . wife, and her sonne,
Edward White's daughter, who ending this life,
By Christ are freed from all woes and strife;
In life kind and constant to husband and friend,
Most zealous and faithfull to God in her end.
Who deceased August 7, Anno Domini 1630."

Mem. The Revell here is a weeke before Michaelmas.

SOUTH WRAXHALL HOUSE.³

This is a very large well built old house. On the gate is the Marshal's Lock, and the Stagg's head caboshed, in stone.

² Still remaining, but one of the niches is concealed by a Tablet.

³ South Wraxhall House, between Bradford on Avon and Corsham, and now the property of Walter Long, Esq., of Rood Ashton, has been described and illustrated with engravings by Mr.

Mem. Over the gate is a handsome chamber, and a good glasse Window full of figures, which I could not see.

[THE HALL.]

The Hall is open and high, and Windowes full of painted glass.¹ In the first

Thos. L. Walker, in "Pugin's Architecture of the Middle Ages." Being very ancient and having been altered at different times it has necessarily become irregular both in plan and style. Outwardly, the oldest portions seem to be the Porch and Hall which have the ecclesiastical character common to dwellings of the 14th century. The armorial bearings in the Hall windows, described by Aubrey, refer to the next century: and the date on the mantel piece was 1598. The Gate house with its projecting window is of Hen. VII.; the large Drawing Room (called the Dining room by Aubrey) was built in 1610.

There is no family evidence to show either by whom the older portions of the House were built, or in what year the Longs first settled here. The statement in "Britton's Beauties of Wilts" [iii. 226.] that the Manor of South Wraxhall belonged to the Hungerfords of Farley Castle and was transferred by them to the Longs can hardly be correct, since in the first place though the Hungerfords were not altogether unconnected with Wraxhall, that was at a later period. The name of Wraxhall does not occur in the lists of their earliest possessions. In the next place the principal landowner down to the Dissolution was the Abbess of Shaftesbury. Robert Long, described in one of the family Deeds of Gore of Alderton as "Armiger" in 1418, and one of the Knights of the Shire in 1421, was a landowner here under Shaftesbury Abbey in 1433. [Rolls of Parl. iv. 467]. To what extent does not appear; but as Leland in 1540 describes the Long's estate here as then only "a little maner," it is not improbable that they made their principal purchase upon the Dissolution of the Monasteries. There were some other ancient owners. Monkton Farley Priory had a farm in South Wraxhall, partly by gift of one Martin a chaplain, about A.D. 1260. They had also the advowson of a certain Berlegh or Barley chapel, the site of which is not exactly known, but may perhaps have been in this parish. Its incumbent was a Rector, instituted by the Bishop. Reginald de Berlee was appointed by the Priory, in 1323. The Crown nominated from that time to 1349, when we hear no more of it. There was a family of Berlegh at Cumberwell, who had in South Wraxhall a place called Berley's Court. This passed to Blunt, and then to Hussey. A chapel called St. Tewen's (corrupted from St. Audoen's) was purchased from Thynne by the Longs in 1629; and in the purchase deed, St. Audoen's is described as endowed with glebe lands, and (inter alia) the tithes of Barley's and Hussey's farm. Not far from South Wraxhall Manor House, in one of Mr. Long's farmhouses there are some very good portions of church stone screen-work with crocketed canopies of about the reign of Edw. I. This is believed to have been St. Audoen's.

The hundred of Bradford belonged to Shaftesbury Abbey: and there were some lands in South Wraxhall and Moxham, which appear to have given to their owner a right to the office of Bailiff of the Hundred.

glass described by Aubrey, not a vestige: nor is any thing known as to the cause or time of their removal. The connexion of many of these shields with the Long family is not quite clear. Some are explained by the Pedigrees: others relate to matches recorded on the monuments here and at Draycote: but many were evidently introduced in compliment either to neighbours or political leaders. (See "Gent. Mag." 1835, p. 593).

¹Courtenay of Powderham. Elizabeth daughter of Walter Lord Hungerford married Sir Philip Courtenay.

²Sir Thomas Long married Margery Darell whose ancestor married the heiress of Calston of Littlecote. (Wilts. Arch. Mag. IV. 226.)

³Perhaps for Lucy of Dorsetshire who intermarried about the 15th century with Long of Purse-Candel in that county, believed to be a younger branch of Wraxhall. There is a monument at Purse-Candel bearing the arms of Long and Lucy. This is also the coat of the Herings who sold Draycote to the Longs.

⁴Stourton. The mother of Elizabeth Darell (wife of Sir Thos. Long) was of this family: with which also Hungerfords and Berkeleys intermarried. Lord Stourton sold Whaddon, Hilperton, and in West Ashton lands still called "Stourton," to Thos. Long of Trowbridge 1543.

⁵Also at the West end of the Draycote monument.

⁶This coat of Long and Carne, and the fetterlock, still remain. On escutcheons at the spring of the arches which form the roof of the hall are shields, bearing, 1. Long. 2. Long impaling Berkeley. 3. Seymour. 4. Long impaling Popham. 5. Cowdrey.

² For John Stafford, Bishop of Bath and Wells translated to Canterbury 1443, died 1452. See “North Bradley.”

³ Perhaps for Henry, Duke of Exeter, a great Lancastrian leader who escaped to France after the battle of Barnet.

⁵ This, in Mr. T. L. Walker's History of Wraxhall, is called the withdrawing Room.

⁶ Newborough of Lulworth, Co. Dorset, (Hutch. I. 135.) and of Berkeley next Frome, Co. Somerset. This shield was also in a house behind the Church at Chippenham. (See “Chippenham.”) It was for Henry Long who died 1490, and his second wife Margaret Newborough.

And GEOMETRIA, under whom thus :

³ The same shield is on the Draycote tomb.

⁴ This shield, but with a border of skull-caps, is given in “Gough's Sepul. Mon.” ii. pl. 101, as on the tomb of Richard Beauchamp Bishop of Sarum, who died Oct. 1481. His uncle Richard, Lord St. Amand, who died 1508, bequeathed by his will “his manor of Charlton, Wilts, to Henry Longe, son and heir of Sir Thomas Longe, Kt. and his heirs.” He also made Sir Thomas one of his Executors. See Nicolas, Testam. Vet. p. 491.

BERWICK BASSET.¹

IN the nave of this Church, in brasse, on a marble, thus: Willelmus hic jacet Bayly sic dno. placet; legabit ecclie solidos centum semper manere. Obiit V idus Nobemb. Anno. Dni. M,CCCC,XXVII. ("William Bayly lieth here, so it pleaseth the Lord. He left 100 shillings to the church for ever. He died 8. Nov. 1427.") His effigies is with short hair, but not shaved; his habit a long robe with a girdle.

In the Chancell: "Here lieth the body of Frances, the wife of Thomas Crippes, who dyed on her knees the twentieth day of. . . . 1664."

¹ Berwick is a generic name. In Domesday Book, a berewick (Berg-wick, manerii vicus) is a hamlet severed from the body of a manor. (Thus, a charter of the Confessor's speaks of "Kingston, with its berewics Raffley and Byri.") Basset is a family name. This Berewick was part of the estate of Adam de Port, forfeited on his being accused of the death of K. Hen. II. (Dugdale). King John gave it to Alan Basset. K. Hen. III. added the lands of one John de Cambon a Norman. The Manor was held of the Crown by the annual render of a mew-hawk. The heiress of the Bassets, widow of Roger Bigod, Earl Marshal, brought it in second marriage, to Hugh Despencer by whom temp. Edw. II. it was forfeited. Patrick de Chaworth is also mentioned as an owner (Edw. I.) of lands appurtenant to his Barony of Kemsford. The Abbot of Stanley near Chippenham also had an estate. In 1. Edw. III. he complains to Parliament that Hugh Despencer had taken it, as well as the Rectory, from him by force. This included Richardston and Langedene: out of which the Abbot paid a pension to St. Bartholomew's Hospital at Bristol. John Stratton was Bailiff under the Abbey. In 1400, Sir John Roche of Bromham was a proprietor. In 1559, Thomas Goddard. In modern times John Nalder: and in 1859, Lord Holland and Mr. Stratton. The Marquis of Lansdowne is Lay impropiator.

Berwick Basset is seven miles S. W. of Swindon. It is a chapelry of Calne, the Vicar of Calne, patron. The old church, (St. Nicholas), of the Eleventh century, had on the S. side a tower of framework cased with weather boarding. It has recently been restored by subscription and was re-opened Oct. 28. 1857. A stained glass window was erected in memory of Mrs. Hawkins of Avebury who left £200 towards the restoration, and £200 to the Poor. There is a curious old house near the Church. Round an old gravestone is also this; "✠ IT HATH PLEASED GOD TO TAKE TO HIS MERCYE HENRYE HOLMAN AND WAS BURYED THE XX DAY OF OCTOBER, AN. DO. 1599."

BLACKLAND.¹CALNE.²

The charter was graunted to this towne by King Stephen wherein is a privilege for their buying and selling in any part of England without paying tonnage and poundage. Arms of the Borough. [Pl. iii. No. 40.]

¹ A large manor in North Wilts, being at that time demesne of the Crown, is called in Domesday Book by the perplexing name of "Nigrarve," which Mr. Wyndham (Wilts. Domes. p. 42) is unable to identify. Black-land (Nigrum arum) seems to be the place meant: particularly as of the two holders of lands called Nigrarve, Hervey of Wilton, and Nigel the Physician, the former is also mentioned as a land holder at Edendone (Headington), and the other at Beversbrook, both close to Blackland, near Calne. (Wilts D. pp. 515 and 437.) Nigel also held the tithes of Calne, and those of "Nigrarve" itself, where a church is mentioned then so ruinous that it was likely to be destroyed. Blackland church happens to be very ancient. In the chancel are two windows considered to be of Saxon type, with triangular heads formed of two straight stones placed on end and resting against each other at the top. These circumstances seem to render it not improbable that Blackland was connected with the "Nigrarve" of Domesday Book. The Abbey of Malmesbury had an estate here, by gift of one Christina de Haddone, from c. 1284 to the Dissolution. Other portions were held in Edw. I. by John de Beinton and Adam de Castrinton under Mortimer, Earl of March. In 1544, William Allein. From about A.D. 1600 a branch of the Hungerfords of Cadenham were owners for about 160 years. Walter Hungerford of Studley near Calne by will 1754 entailed it on his nephew George, remainders to Keate and Luttrell. In 1779 Mr. Maundrell the eastern traveller was proprietor. Afterwards Mr. Merewether, and then Mr. Tanner. Blackland House was purchased about 1848 by Marshall Hall, M.D. In the church is a monument to Robert Smith of Blackland (1691) and his family. The Arms on it, Az. an inescutcheon A. between 6 lions ramp. O. Crest, a Pegasus. The Church (St. Peter's) has lately been restored, and was re-opened Jan. 6, 1859. [See Wilts. Independent, Jan. 13.] The East window is filled with stained glass in memory of Marshall Hall, M.D. who died 1857, the father of the present lord of the manor. The fine timber at Blackland House was devastated by a most extraordinary hurricane on 30th December, 1859, an account of which is published in the "Wilts Archæol. Magazine," Vol. vi. p. 365. The institutions to the Rectory are to be found in the Register of the Dean of Sarum who has episcopal jurisdiction here.

² Whitaker [Hist. of Manchester I. 187] derives the name of Calne (sometimes anciently spelled Colne), as well as that of the Colnes in Gloucestershire, from the Celtic, Col-aun, signifying a "station by the narrow water." The neighbourhood of the town is by no means deficient in springs. A "Chany fountain" is named in a charter of Bradenstoke Abbey.

The Church of Sarum had a large estate here of 11 Hides so early as Edward the Confessor. [Domesday.] The Treasurer of Sarum had two thirds of the Borough in Edw. I. The Manor of Calne (Cauna) was Royal Demesne temp. Wm. I. but ceased to be so in Hen. III. when, with the Hundred, it was granted to the Barons Cantilupe at a fee-farm rent of £15 a year. (T. de N.) In 1. Edw. I. (1272) George Baron Cantilupe died, seised of "The Buries," $\frac{1}{3}$ of the Borough and the out-hundred. The Burgesses paid him at St. Martin's 22d, church scot: and services called "Chipping-gavel" (Market-rent) and Brewin-gavel. His heirs were his sister Milicent, (widow of John de Montalt, and wife of Eudo de Zouche of Harringworth,) and John de Hastings grandson of Johanna another sister. Calne Manor and Hundred were in the share of Zouche. Tanner (Mon. p. 596) mentions a Charter for a Market and Fair in 1303, 32 Edw. I. In Charles I. the Hundred belonged to the Crown. The Steward and Burgesses were incorporated 4 Jas. II. (1688.) In 1711 the Manor was Geo. Duckett's.

The right of election of the Representatives of the Borough in Parliament formerly lay in such of the inhabitants as had right of common and were sworn at the Court of Ogbourn Parva, or St. George, near Marlborough. The origin of this is not precisely known. The Manor of Ogbourn belonged at one time to the King's Honour of Wallingford which again formed part of the estate bestowed by King John on his son the Earl of Cornwall. Several places in this county formed part of the Earldom, afterwards the Duchy of Cornwall, but Calne does not appear among the number in the older lists. Perhaps the custom may date from H. VII., when the Zouche's Estate here was forfeited to the Crown. The burgesses holding under the Crown may have been ordered to attend the King's officer for his convenience, when he held his court at Ogbourn. In 32. H. VIII. [1540] by a private Act of Parliament the Honour of Wallingford was separated from the Duchy of Cornwall and united to the Honour of Ewelme now Lord Macclesfield's. In "Waylen's Marlborough," p. 549 are some remarks upon this custom.

Aubrey [Nat. Hist. of Wilts, 79] says that of the family of Forman of Calne, clothiers, was the Lord Mayor of London [1538] at whose Show was a representation of the Creation, with the motto, "And all for man." Stow says he was of Gainsborough, co. Lincoln.

In 1544 Edw. Hungerford (first of the branch settled at Cadenham in Bremhill) mentions in his will his estate called "Berrils" in Calne. [See "Studley."]

The late celebrated S. T. Coleridge lived here in 1814. [See Memoir by his son 1851, App. cxcviii.]

There was a chantry of St. Mary Magdalen in Calne Church, endowed by John St. Lo, Esq., in 24 Hen. VI. [1445—6.] In 43 Eliz. [1600] "Abbard's Mead and Scale's" late belonging to "Our Lady's Chantry" were held of the Crown by Wm. Seager in right of his wife Edith, "per legem Anglie." [I. p. M.] Ground called "Abbard's" also belonged to Stanley Abbey.

A Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem, at Calne, was in being temp. John. In 1202 a house was quit claimed to Ernald the Presbyter and the Brethren by Richard the Tanner. [Wiltshire Fines 4 John.] Galiena of Calne was a Benefactor [Bowles's Lacock 328.] They held lands at Ufcote under Lacock Nunnery [Do. App. xxxv.] and had three bushels of corn per week from Hudden, Berks. [Tanner, 608.] In 1336 Sir Robert Hungerford gave to John de Pewelle the Custos of the Hospital forty acres at Stock, Quemerford, Calstone, &c. for maintenance of a daily mass for his soul at the Altar of St. Edmund in the Church of Calne: the mass to be said by the second Presbyter in rank. Also a set of robes, and a green hanging powdered with small white crosses. The deed is dated at Calne. [Hungerford Chartulary.] In 1442 Walter Lord Hungerford obtained

King Henry the First, who was a very great benefactor to the Cathedrall Church of Sarum, did by his Deed, bearing date (which is amongst their evidences at Sarum) give to that church the tythes of all his forests and chases in Wilts, Dorset and Berks, Godalming in Surrey cum multis aliis, and the tythe of Calne, a great Tything, 10 miles long, with the appurtenances, (viz. the tythings of Cherhill, Berwick, Calston, Quemmerford, Stock, Stockley, both Studeleys, Eastmeadstreet, Whitley and Whetham).³ The parsonage of Calne is the corps of the Treasurer of the Cathedrall Church of Sarum; the demesne is worth between £400 and £500 license to merge this Chantry with others endowed by his family, being ill supported and some vacant, in a new Foundation of similar kind at Heytesbury. The "Hospital of Saint John" was perhaps the same with the "Free Chapel of Saint John" whose incumbent had a pension after the Dissolution. [See Tanner.]

² By "a miracle," said his partisans. Dunstan's life was a crusade against the married clergy, and such were all the Secular clergy in Anglo Saxon times. Dr. Milman [Lat: Christianity iii. 115] represents the character of this Abbot of Glastonbury as odious, witness his trampling the Royal power under foot, and his cruel treatment of Edwy and Elgiva. "The scene at the Synod of Calne, A.D. 978, when the great question between the Secular and Monastic clergy, (it might almost be said, between the celibate and married clergy) was on the issue before a great Council of the Nation when the whole of the seats filled by the adverse party fell with a crash and buried many of them in the ruins, was so happily timed, that although it might have been fortuitous, (with the monks of course it was providential), it is difficult not to remember Dunstan's mastery over all the mechanical skill of the day." The only beam that remained was the one over which he was standing. [See William of Malmesbury, and Osbern. Vit. Dunst.]

It was here that Roger afterwards Bishop of Sarum pleased the soldiers so well by his soe quick despatch of Masse that he being so fitt for their trade, they took him along with them, which was his rise.⁴

Here was standing in the middle of this church a faire steeple, which fell down about 1642.⁵

by the fact that in his time it did not contain the important Mansion and ornamental Grounds of which the County of Wilts is now so justly proud. It was formerly called the "King's Bowewood Park," having been an enclosure for deer, with an ordinary hunting Lodge, in or adjacent to the great Forest of Chippenham. In 1619 it was granted by James I. to Philip 4th Earl of Pembroke for his life. In 1642, (before the Earl's death which took place in 1655) the reversion was granted by Charles I. to William Murray, Esq., Groom of the Bedchamber, (believed to have been afterwards Earl of Dysart.) But in 1661 it was again in the hands of the Crown, and was leased for 99 years to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, Chief Baron of the Exchequer. In 1726 his family obtained the absolute ownership in fee: and soon afterwards sold it to the Earl of Shelburne. The present House was then built. The site of a Roman Villa between the House and the lake is mentioned in Hoare's Ancient Wiltshire II. 124.

² The shield certainly alludes to Lord St. Amand, owner of Old Bromham House before the Baynton family: but Aubrey's explanation is quite inaccurate. The last Almeric Baron St. Amand died 1403. The two sons John and Almeric mentioned in his will dated 1400 [Test. Vet. 159.] must have died before him: as his immediate heirs were 1. Gerard Braybroke the son of his eldest daughter Eleanor, and 2. Ida, Lady West, his (Lord St. Amand's) sister. Between these two the Barony fell into abeyance. Lady West dying issueless, three daughters of Gerard Braybrooke became heirs. The two younger dying issueless, Elizabeth Braybrooke the eldest became sole ultimate heir. She married, not, as Aubrey says, Lord Cobham, but William Beauchamp (grandson of John Lord Beauchamp of Powyck) who was summoned to Parliament as Lord St. Amand jure uxoris; and dying 1457 was buried at Steeple Lavington. His wife Elizabeth was buried at Bromham, where on her monument is a brass effigy of her with two coloured shields: 1. St. Amand, only. 2, St. Amand and Braybrooke quarterly; impaling Delamere and Roche quarterly.

³ Walter Norborne, Esq. of Studley was one of those gentlemen whose estates were sequestered by the Parliament. A fine of £380 was levied upon him. He married Mary youngest daughter of Henry Chivers of Quemerford by Elizabeth Seacole of Milton, co. Oxon. According to the epitaph, his loyalty to Church and State provoked the populace of Calne to some act of violence at his funeral. He died 1659 aged 64. His widow was buried at St. Paul's, Covent Garden, 9th August, 1689: as also were his second son John, February 1681, and the eldest Walter æt. 29. September 1684. Of this young man, Aubrey in one of his MSS. has this Mem. "Walter Norborne born Nov. 18. 1655, was killed in a duel in the Middle Temple by the Fountain, by Mr. ——— an Irish gentleman, (Sept.) A.D. 168[4]. He hath left two coheirs, great fortunes." One of these, Elizabeth, married Edw. Devereux who became Viscount Hereford in 1683. She survived her husband who died 1700, and remarried John Synes Berkeley, of Stoke, near Bristol. Her son by this marriage, Norborne Berkeley, recovered the Barony of Botetourt (in abeyance) in 1765. Henry Norborne, B.D., of this family, Rector of Langley Burrell 1637, was ejected from his living. There is a pedigree of Norborne of Bremhill in Wilts. Visitation, 1623. A grant of Arms to Norborne of Hilmerton 1651.

¹ Dr. Thomas Pierce, the writer of the epitaph, was son of John Pierce of the Devises, and was successively chorister, Demy, and Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxon. In 1648 on suspicion of having written a Satire against the Parliament Visitors he was ejected from his Fellowship. Upon the Restoration of the King he was made Canon of Canterbury and Prebendary of Lincoln, and in 1661 upon the death of Dr. Oliver he was elected President of Magdalen. But the fellows not agreeing under his government he resigned the office 1671, and in 1675 was promoted to the Deanery of Salisbury. He was esteemed both as a poet and a preacher, had great quickness and sagacity and was much exercised in the controversies handled in those times. The catalogue of his writings which were various and numerous occurs in Wood's history of the Oxford writers, [Athen. Oxon. Vol. ii. Col. 858, &c. Bridges's Northamp. I. 478.] Whilst Rector of Brington Co. Northampton, he printed a Sermon preached at St. Paul's November 10th, 1658, "before the gentlemen of Wilts: it being the day of their yearly feast." He died in 1691 at Tidworth, Wilts, where Robert Pierce was Rector. At Brington he was "much followed for his smooth and edifying way of preaching," but says Mr. Baker the Historian of Northamptonshire [I. 92.] "in his controversial writings there was more of the bitterness of gall than the smoothness of oil." His scarce pamphlet called "A Vindication of the King's Sovereign rights," relating to the patronage of the Prebends of Sarum, and printed at the end of Dr. Rawlinson's Antiquities of the Cathedral Church of Salisbury, is said to have hastened the death of Bishop Seth Ward, his opponent in that controversy.

CAMBERFORD. (Quemerford).

Which now (forsooth) they fantastically write Quemmerford.²

Mem. In Sir Wm. Dugdale's Baronage p. 7. thus: “Werstan, Earle of this Province, was slaine in battle at Kinemereford.”

¹ Of Pinhill in this parish Aubrey [Nat. History of Wilts. p. 57] says, that “a grove of pines gave the name to the seat: and that about 1656 there were remaining about four or five which made a great show on the hill.” But Pinnel was a very old family name at Calne. Pinhill House, then the residence of Mr. Blake, was occupied for a short time in the Civil Wars by Colonel Massey the Parliamentary Governor of Gloucester. “He placed a small body of Musketeers in it, directing them with all despatch to construct a breastwork round the building. But before the fortifications were in any degree rendered available, information of the circumstance reached Devizes where the Royalist officers Goring and Hopton were lying on their way to Bristol. A party was accordingly despatched to Pinhill to put a stop to the affair at once, and just as they were about to fall on, the inmates beat a parley and surrendered at discretion. When the Scoutmaster who conducted this expedition entered the house the prisoners begged hard that they might not be stripped of their wearing apparel, upon which he pointed out of the window to the soldiers outside and told the prisoners that they might easily see that his Majesty's Troops were all so well clothed that they would not accept of Rebel's garments even if offered to them for nothing.” Pinhill House was taken on the 28th December, 1643. “True Informer.”

² The name was written “fantastically” Quemerford so far back as the Hund. Rolls of Edward I. Sometimes Comerford or Kemerford. Aubrey appears to claim for this village a battle which is thus mentioned in the Anglo Saxon Chronicle. “The same day Æthelmund, ealdorman, rode over from the Huiccii at Cynemære's Ford. Then Weoxtan the ealdorman with the men of Wiltshire met him. There was a great fight, and both the ealdormen were slain, and the men of Wiltshire got the victory.” This battle is much more likely to have been at Kemps-ford by the Isis, on the borders of Co. Gloucester and Wilts. In 1257 both the manor of Kinemerford Co. Gloucester, and a lordship of the same name in Wilts, belonged to Patrick de Chaworth [Wilts. Fines.] In 1291 the Calstone family of Littlecote near Hungerford, were land owners. Sir Robert Hungerford in 1335 gave some land here to the Hospital of St. John at Calne. Persons are mentioned in the Hund. Rolls as holding land in virtue of their office as Bedel or Summoner to the Hund. Court of Calne. In 1404 Agnes Wyly was an owner. In 1475 William Temys, whose lands were probably sold with his other estates to the Buttons of Alton. In his Natural History of Wilts (MS.) Aubrey mentions among the successful Wilts clothiers "— Chivers of Quemerford: where the rack doth yet remain [1680]: an estate of £1000 a year. They say they are derived from Chivers of the Mount in Ireland, whose coate they give." In 1568 Henry Chivers, Cloathier, of Bishop's Lavington presented to that church. In 1598 Roger Vince of Quemerford, Cloathier, to Yatesbury. There is a pedigree of the family in Harl. MS. 1165. p. 35 signed "H. Chivers," with additions by a later hand. [See "Leigh Delamere" infra.] Holy Trinity Chapel (of ease to Calne) was consecrated in 1853.

¹ Part of Studley is in Calne, part in Bremhill parish. St. Mary's Priory at Kington had only a very small portion of tithe and rent in the parish of Calne out of which it had to provide the Churchwardens with 2 lbs. of wax per annum for the church. Mr. Bowles [Bremhill p. 77]. maintains that there was a Roman Station (?) here: on the evidence of coins and pottery, &c., plentifully found, chiefly in a field called Red-hill. An ancient way "a Stodleiâ ad Divisas" is mentioned in a Deed (Bowles. 110). In his account of the name "Studley Hungerford," he seems to imply that it was the last relic of the ancient estate of the Hungerfords. Studley House in the parish of Calne never belonged to the principal and older branch of that family, but was only a late acquisition by the latest and youngest branch. In 1611 it had belonged to John Norborne, Esq.; and some years afterwards to Walter Norborne, buried in Calne church 1659. Sir George Hungerford of Cadenham died owner in 1712. His grandson George, the last of the Cadenham line, had it for life. He died 1764 without issue. Studley passed under entail in his uncle Walter Hungerford's will to his cousin Mr. Keate. The Luttrells were also in the entail. Mr. Keate's son took the name of Hungerford and died S. P. His sister and heir married Mr. George Walker of Calne who also took the name of Hungerford. His daughter married Colonel Crewe; whose descendant Lord Crewe has now the greater part of the Cadenham Hungerfords' property in Calne: but Studley House with some land, was sold off many years ago. The site is now occupied by a farm house which belongs to the representatives of the late Mr. Angell of Rumsey House.

A newspaper of 1785 contains the following: "Anne Simms, aged 113, of Studley-green, Wilts. Till within a very few months of her death, she was able to walk to and from the seat of the Marquis of Lansdown, near three miles from Studley. She had been, and continued, till upwards of 100 years of age, the most noted poacher in that part of the country: and frequently boasted of selling to gentlemen, the fish taken out of their own ponds. Her coffin and shroud she had purchased, and kept in her apartment more than 20 years."

Christ Church, Derry Hill, was consecrated in 1840. Bowles's derivation (Brem. p. 20) of Derry

WHETHAM.¹STOCKLEY.²CALSTON WILINGTON.³

Hill, from its having been Royal property, quasi "De Roy," is very improbable. Neither is it likely to be the Irish word, Derry, although that does signify "a place of oaks:" as in the first place Wiltshire does not go to Ireland for its names, and in the next, even in Ireland the word Derry is not used by itself, but always with the addition of some distinctive epithet, as Derry Calgard, London-derry, Derry Columbkil, &c. It may be merely a corruption of "Dairy-hill:" as the Monks of the adjoining Abbey of Stanley on the plain below, had a Farm on the hill, which in the Deeds of that House is spoken of as their "Daeria," or dairy farm. On this hill a great many Roman coins were found 1680.

³ There appear to have been Three ancient properties here.

1. A manor at Caleston, Demesne of the Crown, was given by King John to Fulk de Cantilupe. In 1. Edw. I. (1273) George Baron Cantilupe had built a House here. In 3. Edw. I. Ivo de Zouche had this property in right of his wife Milicent Cantilupe. The Zouches, Lords St. Maur and Harringworth, continued owners till 1547. Pinnel, Chinnok and Lachmere held under them.

2. Ralph de Wylyton, 1254, was bound to find for his estate at Kalston, the service of one haubergeon at Devizes Castle for 6 weeks during war. In Edw. III. John Baron Wilinton son of Ralph the Governor of Devizes Castle left this estate to his son Ralph the 3rd. and last Baron. From this family the Parish takes its second name.

3. In Edw. I. John de Comerwell (also of Compton Comerwell) was the third proprietor. In Hen. III. this belonged to Andrew le Blount, Knight, Lord of Beversbrook, who held under the Barony of De Lisle of Castle Combe. The Blunts presented to the church until 1361. In 1537 "Calston Wyly" was granted to Robert Whytacre alias Bathe. In 1563 Joan Long had half a manor. In 1566 Thomas Page had lands: and in 1579 Calston was granted to Lionel Duckett. In 1582 Stephen Duckett of Flintham, co. Nottingham, was tenant in tail of Calston House. His grandson John a Colonel in the Royalist Army, is said to have escaped from the Parliament's Forces by passing through them concealed in a hearse. The House was destroyed in the Civil War, and the family removed to Hartham. [See "Hartham" in Corsham parish.] They represented Calne in several Parliaments. Their estate at Calston, &c., was sold by Thomas Duckett, Esq. in 1763 to the Earl of Shelburne: (now Lord Lansdowne's).

In 1382 Stanley Abbey had £40 in land at Calston by gift of Sir Robert Hungerford 1336. St. John's Hospital, Calne, and a chantry in Hungerford church were also endowed with lands here.

Calston is celebrated for its copious springs which are owing to its geological position at the base of the chalk hills. "The lower beds of the chalk formation, and every fissure in them, are, with few exceptions, completely filled with water. All the rain and snow which fall upon chalk, percolate downwards to the base, where the water is stopped by a subsoil of blue clay, and that occasions it to accumulate in the chalk until it rises to such a height as enables it to flow over the surface of the adjoining land. In this manner are formed the springs and rivulets which issue near the foot of every chalk hill." [Phillips's Geol. 87.] On the floor of the church is a grave-stone of the Michell family. Other monuments to Newman, Heath, and Bailly.

¹ A Chapelry of Calne. Some writers mention a fight at "Cheren hill" in A.D. 821, which the Saxon Chronicle places at Ellandun. In 49. Hen. III. and 4. Edw. I. the Manor was John Fitz-John's. This Cherhill family varied their name to Fitz-Geoffry, and their arms were, Quarterly O. and G. within a border vair. Their Demesne of Churiel or Cyriel was 268 acres. That of Kuwyth or Cowich 64 acres. Richard Fitz-John of Cherhill died in the French Wars 25. Edw. I. and having no issue left his estate to his four sisters. The eldest, Maud (widow of Furnival) married Wm. de Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, and had this estate. With the exception of being once forfeited temp. R. II., it remained in the Earls of Warwick till the death of the Earl at the battle of Barnet after which King Edw. IV. seized it. King Hen. VII. restored it to the widow for her life: reversion to himself. In 1315 the Lady of the Manor was Matilda (p. Alice) de Toni, wife of Guy Beauchamp Earl of Warwick. In 1400 Sir John de Roches of Bromham had lands here, which descended to St. Amand. Hence that coat of arms seen by Aubrey in the church. On opening a barrow here a quantity of substances, moss, &c. encrusted by a petrifying spring, British pottery, bones, an urn, and a very large pair of ox horns were discovered in 1835. [Devizes Gazette, Oct. 25.] The great earthen-work called Oldbury Camp, on the top of Cherhill Hill, is described in Sir R. C. Hoare's Ancient Wilts. Vol. II.

In the Legier book of Mortimer of March's muniments; "John, Earl of Oxford, in the right of his wife Maud, one of the coheirs of Egidius Badlesmere, among divers other lands in this county, had two Knight's fees with their appurtenances in Comerwell and Compton in Com. Wiltes which Roger de Berle holds at £xi xiijs. iiijd. per annum."²

q. If Comerwell is not Cumberwell, near to Comerford, (Quemerford.)

In this parish is a quarry of soft white stone, betwixt chalke and freestone, which they use much for ovens, it endures the fire rarely well, and I doubt not but it would be good for a glass furnace, or iron forge, or chymists.

p. 97 and Plate viii. He considers it originally British, with Saxon additions. The principal part of the site belongs to G. H. W. Heneage, Esq. of Compton Basset; but part of the western side to the Marquis of Lansdowne, by whom the fine stone obelisk was erected which forms so conspicuous a landmark to a great part of North Wilts. It bears no inscription, but it was placed here about the time of the Birth of the eldest son of Queen Victoria, H. R. H. the Prince of Wales.

¹ In the "Wiltshire Institutions," under A.D. 1521, this place is called, "alias Long Compton." In the same work under A.D. 1307, the entry of "Compton sub album equum" (below the White Horse), to which living Guy Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, presented in that year, refers, not to Compton Basset, though it also happens to be "below a White Horse," but to Compton Beauchamp, near Shrivenham, Berks.

² Aubrey throws but little light on the history of Compton Basset, which owing to the recurrence in old records of the single name, Compton, without any further distinction, is not easy to be traced. But from inspection of original documents kindly permitted by the present proprietor, it appears to have been this.

There were in A.D. 1230 Two Manors, held under the Dunstanvilles, afterwards under the Badlesmeres, as of the Barony of Castle Combe; viz. 1. Compton Basset: and 2. Compton Cumberwell.

1. Compton Basset.

Of the family of Basset there were several branches: all deriving from the celebrated Justiciary Ralph Basset, temp. Hen. I. In Wiltshire the name adheres to this parish, to Wotton, Winterbourne, and Berwick. In A.D. 1233, Gilbert Basset of Compton (probably of Burcester, co. Oxon) is mentioned as a person of influence, who opposed the innovations of Hen. III.: for which "his house at Compton" was placed under the eye of the Sheriff. He was deprived of the manor of Netheravon, (a gift to his family from King John); and on repairing to Court to vindicate his rights was called a Traitor and threatened with the gallows.

In 1271 Philip Lord Basset of Wycombe, Bucks, died leaving a daughter and heiress Aliva, widow of Hugh Despenser, to whom she had brought (inter alia) the Manors of Compton, Wotton Basset, and Broadtown. Despencer, Justiciary of England, and Governor of Devises Castle, had been killed at Evesham 1265. His Estates were seized, but his widow recovered great part of them. She married 2ndly, Roger Bigod 5th Earl of Norfolk and Earl Marshal, whence she is sometimes called The Countess Marshal. She died 1280.

Hugh, the "elder Despenser" of Edw. II., had this Manor, Berwick and Winterbourne Basset, Fastorne, and others. After his downfall, his estates were plundered, parks and houses at Compton and elsewhere robbed, to the damage of £30,000. [Wilts Archæol. Mag. III. 249.] Being forfeited to the Crown they were settled first on the Queen: then on Edmund of Langley Duke of York (5th son of Edw. III.,) and afterwards (1415) on his son when in want of funds to build his college of Fotheringay. [Bonney's Hist. of F. 38.] On his death at Agincourt they were held by his Duchess Philippa [Mohun] till 1431. The names of several Tenants under the Crown occur. Sir Guy de Bryan 1365. Best, 1389. Roger Mortimer Earl of March, 1398. Lypiate 1429. After the death of Queen Catharine Parr, who held it in dower, it was sold by the Crown in 1552 [Edw. VI.] for £952, to Sir John Mervyn of Fonthill, whose grand-daughter and heiress married George Touchet Lord Audley: and 1663, [15 Charles II.] was sold by Mervyn Touchet and James Audley, Earl of Castlehaven, to Sir John Weld of Bindon co. Dorset, ancestor of the Welds of Lulworth. He built the present house at Compton and died 1674. His son William, inheriting the estates of an uncle, left Wiltshire in 1684. In 1700 Humphrey Weld, son of William, sold Compton to Sir Charles Hedges of Richmond, Surrey, Secretary of State. William Hedges of this place married Elizabeth sole heiress of the Gores of Alderton; and in 1715 sold Compton to William Northey, son of Sir Edward Northey, Attorney-General to Queen Anne. In 1761 it was re-sold by this family to John Walker Heneage Esq., owner at the time, (by inheritance), of Tockenham (in Lynham) and several other properties, among which was, in this parish, the small manor of Compton Cumberwell.

Some part of Compton was held in 1100—1250 by Reginald Mohun, and in 1476 by his under tenants.

Some part also of the Basset estate both here and at Berwick Basset, passed by an heiress of Delamere (of Beversbrook and Rockley c. Edw. I.) to Sir John Roche, and by his coheiress to the Bayntons. John Eyre also appears as an owner in the parish in 1332. John Pawlett, 1455.

2. Compton Cumberwell.

It is this to which Aubrey alludes. It is a small property lying in Compton but originally distinct from it and belonging to other owners. The name was sometimes spelled Comb'ville.

There are in Wiltshire two Cumberwells, this at Compton, and another, Cumberwell Park near Bradford on Avon. Both were held under the Barony of Castle Combe, and in 1339 on the partition of that Barony (then Lord Badlesmere's) among his daughters, the seignory of the two Cumberwells was part of the share of Maud wife of John de Vere, the "Earl of Oxford" mentioned by Aubrey. Under that Barony, both Cumberwells belonged for some centuries to the same successive owners: viz. the Families of, 1st, Berlegh of Bathampton and (as heirs of Ford) of Swainswick. 2nd, Blount. This family was of Bitton and Mangotsfield, Co. Gloucester, and of Woodborough, Wilts, (as heir of D'Amneville): also of Beversbrook and North Wraxhall, and a small estate in South Wraxhall. 3rd, Sir John Hussey, Knt., who married an heiress of Blount. In 1530, either by purchase or family connection, it is believed by the former, both Cumberwells came from the Hussey family to William Button Esq. of Alton (afterwards of Tockenham Court in Lyneham), and were held together by his family for many years. On the death, without issue, of Sir John Button his grandson the 4th and last Baronet, in 1712, Compton Cumberwell and several of the Button properties above mentioned, went to Sir John's sister Mary; of whom a curious old portrait is preserved in Compton House. She married Clement Walker Esq. Usher of the Court of Exchequer, M.P. for Wells, and author of "The History of Independency;" who died in 1681. From him they descended to John Walker Esq. Hereditary Usher of the Court of Exchequer, who died 1758: and from him to his son John Walker Heneage Esq., who three years afterwards purchased Compton Basset, as mentioned above. He died 1806. His estates are now the property of his eldest nephew G. H. W. Heneage Esq. by whom the house was restored. Round the parapet are Arms of previous owners, Weld, Hedges and Northey: and over the front door, the shield of Heneage and Walker quarterly: Impaling, Webber and Nicholson quarterly.

In the Church I find nothing remarkable but this coate [Pl. iv. No. 49] which is in the North windowe twice. Mem. By the name of Cotton, also Sir Thomas Ridwar, temp. E. 1.¹

Col. Montagu in his Ornithological Dictionary mentions that the greatest number of window swallows nests he ever saw, was fifty ranged in a continuous line under the eaves of the stables of Compton House.

The other Cumberwell, near Bradford on Avon, was bequeathed by the will of Sir Robert Button, 3rd Baronet who died 1679, to the son of his sister Jane, Charles Steward Esq., (killed by a fall from his horse and buried in Bradford Church 1698): at whose death that property passed to Heneage Walker Esq. who sold it to John Allen Cooper, from whom it went to the family of Taunton, and from them by sale to the family of Thos. Clarke Esq. the present owner.

¹ The names of Cotton and Rydware are not connected with this parish. The shield is perhaps meant for Sir Guy de Bryan, Steward of the Household to Edw. III., sometime of Compton Basset as already mentioned: but the colours are different. The patronage of the Church, from 1311, has always been in the Bishops of Sarum with two or three exceptions. In 1337 Andrew Blunt Lord of Beversbrook presented. In 1432 the Prior of Burcester (Bicester) Co. Oxon: a Religious House founded in 1182 by Gilbert Basset, Baron of Hedingdon (near Oxford). In White Kennet's History of Ambrosden p. 205 is an Arbitration of the Bishops of Lincoln and Bath relating to the Prior's right to the Advowson of Compton Basset. In 1552 Nicholas Snell of Kington St. Michael presented by leave of Edward Baynton. The Church (St. Swithin's) is partly Norman, partly Perpendicular. The stone screen has a loft over a stone vaulting constructed on HEDINGTON.

Ex MSS. Harleianis: "Brampton et Brian Castle. A Knight's fee in Hadyndone in Com. Wilts., which the Prior of Bradenstoke holds at £6. 13. 4." Mem. In the copy it is doubtfull, by reason of a fracture, whether there were another letter P or S.¹ before H in Hedyndone.

In Hedington field is found plenty of old cindres, the melting of iron ore; the like at Bowdon. In Heref. and Monmouthshire, they use these cindres to melt down their new digged oare the more easily. These Blomeriers² were in the times pillars and arches, and its eastern front perforated. In the piers of the screen are twelve small brackets with canopies, once probably containing figures of the Apostles. The rood loft had formerly an oaken railing. This was removed, and a stone railing put in its place, but of an earlier style than the screen itself. In Weale's Quarterly papers on Architecture, Vol. III. are engravings of this roodscreen, and of the hour glass and frame (date about 1648—60) attached to the pulpit. The hour glass is also figured in "Instrumenta Ecclesiastica." The stone pulpit and desk were given by Mrs. Heneage in 1842. A stained glass window has been lately placed on the North side.

The Arms on one of the bells, viz. a chevron between 3 cross crosslets fitchee, with the initials I. W. [Wilts. Mag. II. 341] are those of some family of Walker, but not the coat quartered by Mr. Heneage.

¹ The missing letter was C, and the place to which Aubrey's Extract refers, was Chadington (in Lydiard Tregoz, formerly L. Ewyas) which was held by Bradenstoke Priory under the Ewyas family of their Lordship of Brampton Bryan, Co. Hereford. The Extract does not refer to Hedington. This manor (Edinton in Wilts Domesday p. 225) belonged to Edward of Salisbury. One portion of it may have been given with his daughter on her marriage with Humphrey Bohun, for, under the Bohuns, of their Honour of Trowbridge, it was held in temp. Hen. III. by the Barons Cantilupe. [See "Calne."] A moiety of the manor was given by Ela Longespee to the Abbey of Lacock, charged with the support of two chantries to the Ryvers family, which the Nuns seem to have neglected. Ralph Augiers was an owner here temp. John. The Patron of the church was the Prior of Monkton Farley, by gift of the Bohuns. After the Dissolution, in 1543, Lambard. In 1571—1605, Partridge, of South Cerney Co. Gloucester. In 1670, Daniel. In 1721—1800, the family of Rogers: for whose pedigree, see p. 22. "Bradford on Avon."

of the Romans or Britons. Hereabout the water in the ditches, on the fall of the leafe, looks blewish, which is an indication of iron, as also the veins of other coloured sand. At Seene or Send, is iron ore so rich that it will run in the Smyth's forge, yet this treasure was not understood, for the forest was destroyed about 1630, and now no wood left in the parish to melt it.

In Weeke field, by Sandy Lane in the parish of Hedington, digging the earth, in March 1653, deeper than the plough had gone, to sowe carrots, they found foundations of howses, and coales, for at least a quarter of a mile long, and a great quantity of Roman money, silver and copper, of the Emperors. Among the rest was an earthen pott of the colour of a crucible, and of the shape of a Prentice's Christmas Box, with a slit in it, containing about a quart, which was near full of money. I gott the pott, and about a quarter of a pint of the money, most of it in copper, which was stolen by a servant from me. V. Aulularia Plauti. Among the coin there was a good deal of small copper pieces no bigger than a silver single penny, which Q. if not the Roman Denarii? The stamp is The inscriptions were of This pott I gave to the Repository of the Royal Society at Gresham College.¹

¹ Dr. Stukeley considered Hedington to be the much disputed Roman Station Verlucio: which Sir R. C. Hoare places only a little way off, at Wans House. The Dr. supposed the true name to be Verolucio, from Celtic Vrô and lug, a "white habitation." The Saxon name Hedington he derives from Heddan-town, (town of Hedda.) In his Iter. vi. (p. 143) he says: "This town is but small at present, lying at the bottom of a great hill in a rich marly country. The inhabitants are not surprised when you enquire for Antiquities. They assert it to have been a very old and great city. Infinite quantities of antiquities are found here: handfuls of coins brought home every time they plough, (Madam Whitlock has many): and the streets and foundations of houses found for a great length, sufficiently evince it. Reuben Horsal, clerk of Abury, told me, he had seen a gallon of Roman Coin taken up at a time in Hedington field, in an urn covered with a stone." Hedington Wick more particularly abounds in these relics. For an account of a Roman leaden coffin, &c., see Archæol. Journal, Vol. xii. p. 283, 1855. Another discovery is described in the Devizes Gazette, April 1855. In Aubrey's MS. Monum. Brit. (Bodl. Lib.) is a letter to himself from Sir James Long, with a list of a great number of coins found in 1688 at this place. Hedington lies close to the old Roman road which was formed in this part along the line of the earlier Wansdyke. On the hill above (mistaken for Roundway by Stukeley) is a camp which has led some to think that here was the celebrated battle of Ethandun for which there are so many competing places. For further notice of Hedington, see History of Lacock (Bowles), pp. 186, 315. xxxij. Also Beauties of England and Wales; "Wilts." p. 434. Robert Child, clothier of this place, was brother to the Goldsmith and founder of the first banking house in London, Sir Francis Child.

YATESBURY.

In the Church¹ here is nothing to be found, neither is any tradition that I can yet learn of any remarkable thing in the parish. In the field eastwards from the town is a barrow or two.

¹ The Church (All Saints) originally Early Norman, was rebuilt early in the 13th century, repaired, and robbed of its South aisle, at the end of the 14th. Of the Font, very handsome Norman on E. English base, long choked with whitewash and ochre, a good woodcut is given in the "Builder." The Church was restored, and chancel entirely rebuilt in 1854.

The name is variously spelled in old Records, as, Zatesbury, Hyatebiri, Jetesbury, Sitesburi, Etesbury: and being sometimes confounded with Heytesbury in South Wilts, it is difficult to trace the descent of property. Subject to error from this cause, the following names occur. Temp. John, Barville, and Fitz Everard. In Hen. III. Reginald of Calne and Fitz-Mathew. In 1308 Walrond in right of an heiress of Longespée Her property (not a large one) passed by another marriage to Sir Baldwin Freville of Warwickshire whose family in 1. Richard II, contested with the Dymocks the championship of England. They were succeeded by Sir Robert Aston (1464), [Branch and Dole 31. and I. p. m.] In 1330 Edmund Earl of Kent in right of his wife Margery Wake. From 1300 to 1366 the Bourdon family. In 1349 Sir Peter Doignel, in right of Agnes Bourdon his wife. In 1410 John Preston held, "as of the Castle of Devizes." From 1432 for above 300 years the Ernle family. By his will, 1764, George Hungerford, Esq., L.L.D. of Studley House, near Calne, bequeathed his Manor Farm of Yatesbury to his second wife, and widow, Elizabeth (Pollen) who died 1748. Their monument is in the Church. By this lady's family, their estate was sold a few years ago to Mr. Tanner.

The Prebendal estate at Yatesbury was held in 1085 by Alured of Spain a foreign Ecclesiastic. In 1716 Strickland Gough farmed it. Isaac Walton, the fisherman's nephew, was Prebendary 1678. A list of earlier Prebendaries is printed in Dr. Rawlinson's "Antiq. of the Abbey Church of Bath, and of Salisbury" p. 343.

Some of the barrows in the parish were examined by the late Dean Merewether. See Arch. Inst. Journ., Salisbury Vol. 1849, p. 95.

¹ "The architecture of an old English Gentleman's house, especially in Wilts and thereabout, was a good high strong wall, a gate house, a great hall and parlour; and, within the little green court where you come in, stood on one side the Barne. They then thought not the noise of the threshold ill musique. This is to be seen at severall old houses and seates, e.g. Bradfield, Alderton, Stanton St. Quintin, Yatton Keynell &c." [Nat. Hist. of Wilts 101.]

The House of which Aubrey speaks was probably taken down soon after his time and replaced by one of modern style, the offices being retained. There is no Manor House at Alderton now, the last having been taken down about 45 years ago. From minute description given by old people, it did not at all correspond with the one which Aubrey describes. An avenue led to it across the large field called "The Ridges." The present road to the church is new. The house stood on the North side of the church; the site is visible near the fishponds which still remain.

On the Convent Seal: [Pl. iv. fig. 59] The Virgin crowned, standing, and holding Christ in her arms; below is the half figure of the Abbot holding up his hands in the posture of prayer, Mr. Dugdale sayeth.

Inscription: S. ABBATIS ET CONVENTUS B. MARIE DE KINGSWOOD.¹

¹ Aldrington was held of the Crown by the Mortimers at the Domesday Survey, afterwards by the Cliffords of Clifford Castle. Under these the principal estate belonged to Henry de Hartham. So late as 1442 there were still some lands in the parish, then occupied by Ralph Ivy, charged "from ancient time, with providing one chaplain to celebrate Divine Service in the church of Aldrington for the souls of the ancestors of the Lords of Hartham." Thomas de Pedworth appears to have succeeded the Harthams as mesne tenant. From him, about 1392, it was bought by William Gore (of a Melksham family,) whose descendants continued here for nearly 400 years. In 1583 Alderton manor is described as held by the Gores "of the Queen, of her manor of Dunley." By degrees they became large owners in adjoining parishes; at Grittleton, Surrenden in Hullavington, Luckington, Yatton Keynell, &c. They had Grittleton manor (late the Abbey of Glastonbury's) from the Dissolution to 1601. Hartham in 1457. Their estate at Melksham and Shaw they sold to the Brounckers in 1544.

The name of their family is now chiefly remembered in the person of Thomas Gore Esq. the writer on subjects connected with Heraldry: and an intimate friend of John Aubrey. [See Wilts. Mag. IV. 107.]

This Mr. Gore was at the pains to form a careful MS. vol. of Family evidences, which is now in the possession of G. Poulett Scrope Esq. It is written with extreme precision in a fine bold hand, and supplies ample particulars of their history and property. His monument is against the North wall of the chancel. "M. S. Thomæ Gore de Aldrington armigeri (cujus exuviæ hic juxta sitæ) honoris ergo posuit filius et hæres ejusdem nominis. Obiit Martii 31^o. A.D. 1684. æt: suæ 50^o." Then follow some Latin verses. By the death of Thomas Gore's youngest grandson Walter Gore in 1712, the estates passed to Elizabeth, sister of Walter. She married William Hedges Esq. of Compton Bassett, whose sons dying, Eleanor Hedges their sole surviving sister became heiress and carried the property by her marriage into the family of Montagu of Lackham.

At the breaking up of the Montagu property, was unfortunately dispersed a number of manuscripts, collected or composed by Mr. Thomas Gore just mentioned. These if they could now be recovered would be of much value in illustration of Wiltshire History. There are in the Church several inscriptions to the Gores, besides those given by Aubrey. Col. Montagu the Ornithologist, lived for some time at Alderton House, though he was not owner of the estate. [See Memoir of him, Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 87]. In 1827 the whole of the Alderton estate was purchased by the late Joseph Neeld Esq. (then of London); and was his first acquisition in the county of Wilts. The Surrenden estate had been bought by Mr. Burne, father of the Rev. William Way Burne late Rector of Grittleton. On Mr. Neeld's purchasing in the following year the adjoining estate of Grittleton, he came to reside in the County. The village of Alderton was at that time in a state of general decay. He rebuilt the cottages and Parish Church, (the latter in 1844,) and erected also a new school and Parsonage House.

Alderton Grange belonged before the Dissolution to Kingswood Abbey. The Gores then purchased the fee simple.

The Rectory was inappropriate; having been given, together with that of Sherston Magna, by Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, c. 1442 to Tewkesbury Abbey. A vicar was endowed for Sherston, but none for Alderton. After the Dissolution both rectories were given to the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester. The utmost effort of their liberality has hitherto been to allow £30 a year towards the stipend of the Perpetual Curate of Alderton: on the patronage of this valuable preferment being transferred to the late Mr. Neeld he augmented it.

Of the old church (St. Giles), some portions of which are preserved in the new school, a description is given in the "Builder," 1845, p. 223. On the base of the original tower, a new tall spire was erected. The chancel windows contain some good old stained glass, the Crucifixion, St. Michael, &c. On a tablet placed against the wall of the South aisle, is the following inscription in memory of the late Rev. Anthony Austin, who is buried in the church yard.

"Antonio Austin, vicario de Aldrington, quem vivum diligebant, sepultum desiderant, Hoc Marmor, P. C. ex amicis amantissimi. Ob. VII. Kal. Sept. A. S. MDCCCXLVIII."

¹ The Editor is unable to say by whom so great an honour was conferred upon this smallest of hamlets: which lies, on the left bank of the River Avon, between Chippenham and Christmalford. Though the names cannot refer to Royalty, it is odd that out of six tenants paying acknowledgments here to Malmesbury Abbey in 12. Edw. I. two should bear the names of "John le Kyng, and Matilda la Quene" (Cartulary List.) A Manor of "Avene" called at that time "in Bremhill" was given to Malmesbury Abbey by K. Athelstan. (New Mon. "Malms." 259). Under the Abbot it was held by Godfrey de Sifrewast temp. Edw. I. (T. d. N.) This was a Dorsetshire family [see Hutch. "Hook," I. 241] but is met with here, at Chitterne (Heyts. 170) Poulshot, and Winterbourne Shrewton, (T. de N.) Sifrewast was succeeded by Maltravers, and Stafford. From Edw. II. to Rich. II. Avon belonged to the Pavelys of Westbury. Elena widow

BIDDESTON.

Here are two Parish Churches :

(ST. PETERS.)

That at the lower end of the village is St. Peter's Church, formerly a prettie little Church, but now lamentably ruined, and converted to a barne, and nothing of antiq. there. At this Church, in Mr. Teys his time, viz. about the beginning or a little before the late warres, was not only Prayers, but also Communions.

Mem. On the old gate at Mr. Monjoy's by St. Peter's Church, was a scutcheon, in freestone, charged only with a bend; now the coate of Cotel is G. a bend Or. [see Pl. ii. fig. 1.] and, as I remember in Tropnell's MSS., Cotel had an estate here, viz. which afterwards was given to the Monkes at Mounckton Farlegh.¹

of Walter Pavely, who remarried Sir Edward Cerne of Draycote [see Brass in D. church] had it for her life, and is sometimes called Elena de Avon. Sir Edward held it under the Honour of Trowbridge. [I. P. M.] At Elena's death in 1419 it reverted to a coheir of Pavely, who married Sir William Cheney, and from him by another inheritance to Sir John Willoughby (de Broke.) [See Sir R. C. Hoare's Westbury p. 3; and Wilts. Mag. III. 178. Pedigree of Cerne.]

It was a chapelry to Christmalford, and the incumbent was Rector. The Pavelys presented in 1333. Sir Edward Cerne (jur. ux.) 1383. Walter Talboys of Ryme Co. Lincoln 1442. Lord Willoughby de Broke 1452—1509. Avene chapel is named in the Valor Eccl. (H. VIII.); John Hawke, Rector: Value 33s. 4d. Soon after that period the chapel must have been destroyed. Robert Hungerford Esq. of Cadenham purchased the Tithes. His descendant in the 5th generation, Walter Hungerford of Studley near Calne, by his will, 1754, bequeathed his "Parsonage of Avon" to his nephew George (afterwards of Studley) for his life, in tail to Robert Blake of Sodbury, Co. Gloucester who had married one of his nieces.

There is another small place of the name, close to Old Sarum.

¹ The name of Cotel occurs here in a Deed of 1358, and if the Tropnells had any estate at Biddeston they probably succeeded Cotel. [See Atworth.] Biddeston St. Peter's consists only of an ancient Manor House, 3 cottages and about 130 acres of land. This was sold in 1626 by Sir Gilbert Prynne (of Allington in the adjoining parish) and Sir George Hastings of Gray's Inn his son in law, to William Mountjoy, gent. This family remained for six generations, and founded a charity in the Parish. Anne widow of the last Mr. Mountjoy and wife of John Lee of Wormwood, in Box, sold Bid. St. Peter's in 1811 to Mr. Thomas Little of Bid. St. Nicholas, by whom it was sold in 1841 to Lord Methuen. Over the mantel piece in the hall of the manor house are three small stone shields. On two of them is, apparently, a horse's head bridled. On the centre one, the hame of a horse's collar.

(ST. NICHOLAS.)

"Jo. de Tivetot had the fourth part of a Knight's Fee in Biddeston in Com: Wiltes, which Nicholas de Biddeston holds, worth 100 shillings." Ex. MSS. Harl.

At the upper end of the village is St. Nicholas' Church. Here in y^e chancel N. side, is a freestone Altar Monument, without any inscription. It hath 3 escutcheons. [Pl. iv. No. 60]. W. Aubrey thinkes that this Monument was of Haynes. Mr. Thynne, of Bideston, had the Parsonage from Haynes.¹

Monkton Farley Priory had the Patronage of Bid. St. Peter's. The little Church being quite ruinous was taken down about 20 years ago. The Bell Turret is preserved in the gardens at Castle Combe. It was of Perpendicular style, and is described with illustrations by Mr. T. L. Walker in "Pugin's examples of Gothic Architecture," Vol iii. Also in the "Saturday Mag." No. 776. 1844: and "Gent. Mag." 1838. p. 142. It stood behind the Old Manor House of the Mountjoys: and the site is now used as a garden. The Parsonage stood at the corner where the lane from Allington joins that from Biddestone to Corsham. The distinction of Parishes is still kept up: the garden wall of the manor house being the boundary. Aubrey's "Mr. Tey's" is called in the Wilts. Institutions, Elias Tyse, Rector of St. Peter's 1620—1633.

In Hen. III. Reginald de Burnivale was the manorial Lord of another part. In Edw. II. the Gascelyns of Sheldon; whose heiress marrying Edward Hales, sold her estate to Walter Lord Hungerford the High Treasurer, in 1424. In Hen. VIII. his descendant Lord Hungerford of Heytesbury was executed and his manors forfeited. The Crown appointed — Grimston, Steward of this estate, Little Cheverell and others. John Coxed, LL.D. was Lord of the Manor 1739—51. Paul Methuen, Esq. 1785.

Monkton Farley Priory had £6 a year in "Bydston cum Hartham," partly by gift of one Archard. Some part of the parish near West Yatton used to be called B. Keynes from an ancient owner.

In the Sarum Registers, as printed by Sir T. Phillipps, the Presentations are to St. Peter's Rectory only, until 1719. From that time, to St. Peter's cum Vicarage of Bid. St. Nicholas. (The entries in that volume under the name of "Buddesden" refer to a place near Ludgershall). From this it would seem that St. Peter's was the original parish Church. But as the architecture of St. Nicholas's is older than was that of St. Peter's, the latter may have been preceded by a still older one on its site. See Mr. Walker's Book above referred to, for both Bell Turrets. Views of the Bell Turret, Norman Font, and Doorway of St. Nicholas, with a description of both churches, are given by Mr. E. W. Godwin, Architect, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. 143.

The Arms [No. 60] are those of Haynes, with quarterings. The name is old in Castle Combe and Corsham. In 1611 Thomas Thynne, Esq. was of Biddeston. In 1640 Henry Thynne.

At the George Inne here, is a well at the back of the house the virtues whereof are attested by the neighbours for the spleen, the stone and fitts of the mother. Blue marle at the bottom of the well yields by precipitation a sediment of yellowish nitre. Mem. In this village are severall springs, and marle is to bee seen in the highway. Mr. M(ontjoy) about 1661, by a little gutter, turned the water, which runnes through the street, into his pond, which hath improved a leasowe from £5 per ann. to at least £25 per annum, and is farther continuing it. I conceive this improvement is chiefly from the nitre, though the filth of the street helps.¹

BOX.

(Church. St. Thomas a'Becket.)

By the three graduall stone seates is a Lyon rampant, in stone, with a cross-crosslet on his shoulder.²

Edmund Smith, commonly called "Rag Smith," the friend of Steele and Addison, author of "Phædra and Hippolytus" and translator of Longinus on the Sublime, died at Hartham 1709, and was buried in St. Nicholas, but there is no memorial. A very small oldfashioned leaden box containing the bones of a child was found in the churchyard wall (east) in 1855. In the same year Elizabeth Packer was buried aged 106. In a Deed of 1258 occurs "John de Angulo" (of the Corner) and in another, 1358, "Nicholas in le Hole" of Biddeston. A letter of Mr. Tattersall's, Rector of Biddeston and Grittleton, 1696, mentions that "Poor Dr. Noble has overshot himself in Mrs. Frampton's estate at Biddeston, and is forced to abscond."

² A tessellated pavement, a bath, and other remains of a Roman villa have been found, a few yards to the South of Box Church. See Gent. Mag. 1831, p. 596; Do. 1833, April, p. 357: and Journ. Brit. Arch. Assoc. Dec. 1860, p. 341. The Mosaic was of coarse pattern, and was chiefly destroyed by exposure to frost.

Under "Ditchridge" (infra) Aubrey writes: "Parson Bridges says Sir Hugh Speke told him that he had searched in the Black Book and found. . . , that 100 years after the conquest Box church was built by the Earl of Hereford." The Bohun family (Earls of Hereford) were certainly proprietors in the neighbourhood, and founded the Priory of Monkton Farley. But the "lion rampant in stone on the gradual seats" (all now gone) may perhaps be a relic of the real builders, the Bigod family. In Hen. III. Sampson Bigod, Kt. was Lord of the Manor. He is sometimes called "Sampson de la Boxe." His seal, appendant to a Deed (without date) by which he grants the wood called Kingswood to Agnes de Shokerwyck, is a Lion rampant, with the legend ✠, SIGILL: SAMPSONIS: BIGOD. In 14. Edw. III. Henry Bigod de la Boxe sold the manor to Sir John Molyns who held it as of Trowbridge Castle under the Duchy of Lancaster. During a forfeiture by one of his descendants in 20 Rich. II. it was held by Thomas, Duke of Gloucester. Eleanor Molyns an heiress brought it in marriage, temp. Hen. VI. to Robert third Lord Hungerford: and by his grand daughter, an heiress, it passed to the Hastings family.

On the South side of the Church a faire freestone Monument of Roman Architecture, borne up with Ionique pillars, a figure incumbent on the Altar, in armour. "Here lyeth the body of Anthony Long, Esqr. buried the 2d of May, 1578." Over the Marshall's Lock, in a scroll, this motto, viz. "CELI VALLI LUC." [Pl. iv.]

A smaller manor in Box "super Wedere," (including perhaps "Weather-cliff"?) belonged to Agnes St. Maur in 1257. This passed by descent to Margaret Lady Sandes, daughter of Sir John Erleigh of Rowdon, and of Beckington Co. Somerset. In 13. Hen. VI. she sold it to Lord Hungerford the High Treasurer. In 1540 on the execution of Lord Hungerford of Heytesbury, it was confiscated, and held for a time by the Duke of Gloucester. Afterwards on being restored to the Hungerfords, these lands were held by Snell, Leverage, Long, and others, as of Sir Walter Hungerford's manor of Rowley alias Wittenham (a manor now in the parish of Farley Hungerford.)

The Blounts of Bitton had lands in Box, temp. Edw. IV.

RUDLOW. The name is often spelled Ruge-lawe in old Deeds: meaning perhaps Ridge-lawe, a tumulus (Anglo Saxon hlāwe) on a ridge. There are said to be traces of barrows not far off. William Westbury, J. of Com. Pleas, was owner in 1448. In Edw. IV. Alice widow of John Newburgh. Afterwards Edmund Leverage, In 1589, Sir Walter Hungerford. About 1720, Webb. Now, Lord Methuen.

The Rectory of "Box and Ryddelaw," with 48 acres of "Rayle Land" at Wadswick, and a church house, were given by Bartholomew Bigod to Monkton Farley Priory, which presented to the Vicarage. Sir Thomas Long of Draycote, 1508, left the lease thereof to his son Robert. At the Dissolution, the Rectory was bought by Sir William Sherington (also purchaser of Lacock Abbey) and Mr. Bonham of Haselbury in Box. John Bonham sold [16 Eliz.] to Sir John Smyth of Long Ashton near Bristol and he to Sir John Young of Bristol. The Vicarage was afterwards [1613] in the gift of the Speke family, then of the Webbs of Marshfield, now of H. D. C. S. Horlock D.D., the vicar.

The Narrative of Walter Bushnell, vicar 1644, ejected temp. Cromwell, was published in 1680. It was answered by Humphrey Chambers, D.D. of Pewsey, and by W. Blissett who was clerk to the Commissioners for ejecting him. These tracts are in the Br. Mus. Library. The case is in "Cobbett's State Trials." See also "Walker's Sufferings of the Clergy," Pt. I. p. 180. Edit. 1714. And "Wood's Ath. Oxon." 11. 273.

² Jewell Long, nephew of Anthony, and son of Sir Robert, by his wife Barbara Carne. He was brother to the Sir Walter on whose death Draycote and Wraxhall were severed, and also to Henry Long who was shot by Sir Henry Danvers. [Wilts. Archæol. Mag. I. 305.]

The Speke family (see Burke's Ext. Barts.) were of Haselbury, and Lords of the Manor of Box: succeeded by Speke Petty of Cheney Court in this parish: now W. B. Northey Esq.

³ The shield No. 62. is that of Hugh Speke of Haselbury, (died 1624) and his wife Eliza daughter of Henry Beke of Hartley Court, Berks. [Ashm. Berks II. 371.] The shield No. 64. is that of his son Sir Hugh Speke who married Anna only daughter and heir of John Mayney of Staplehurst, Kent. He died 1661. There are other Epitaphs to this family, and some lines by Edmund Waller to the last Baronet who died young.

HASELBURY.² (In Box.)

Is in the Hundred (read Honour) of Wallingford, in Berks. It was one Sir John Young's; then sold to Speke. Sir Hugh Speke told me he hath the Abbot of Glastonbury's carpett here, in the midst whereof is his coate of arms richly embroidered.

Old Coates in the Hall window. I thinke, Blue, 3 lioncells ramp. argent.

Haselbury Quarre is not to be forgott; it is the eminentest free-stone quarry in the West of England, Malmesbury and all round the country of it. The old men's story that St. Adelme, riding over there, threw downe his glove, and bade them digge and they should find great treasure, meaning the Quarry.

Quarre: if it is Haselbery or Haselbury (i.e.) if there has been a Camp or Borough. In the fields about Haselbury, Box, and Ashwick, by Marsfield, are stones of the bignesse and shape of Scallops, of a kind of coarse freestone.

¹ The Parsonage house was burned down 6th Nov. 1805. The scroll signified "Remember the four last things" (viz: Death, Judgment, Heaven and Hell.)

There is a small coffin-like niche, about 14 inches long, in the South wall of the chancel, outside. The south aisle was built 1840. A new stained glass East window has been put up, "To the glory of God. In Memory of Mary the wife of George Pinchin of Hatt House in this Parish and 5 of their children, 1857."

² Haselbury House, once much larger than it is at present, lies one mile from Box in a hollow under the end of Corsham Ridge. In 43. Hen. III. the manor was held by William le Marshal. In Edw. I. by Henry Crook, of the Honour of Wallingford. (T. de N.) In Edw. II. by Richard Crook, Do. From 1315 to 1637 by the Bonhams, who came from near Lacock. The house "was a thing of a simple building afore that old Mr. Bonehom father did build there." Leland. [See Notes, Wilts. Archæol. Mag. I. 144.] Sir John Young was probably of the Colleton family. [See Burke's Ext. Barts.: also "Wraxhall (North)" infra.]

The carpet may have belonged to the Abbot of Glastonbury, but Haselbury never did. The "Quarre," so much to be remembered, was the property of Bradenstoke Priory, by gift of Walter Croc. [New. Mon.] The Prior also presented to the Rectory. There was once a chapel in or near the House. After its destruction it was customary for a new Rector on induction to read prayers in a room in the old house, and to have a portion of mould given into his hand in a CHAPEL PLAYSTER (in Box).

Mem. In this Parish is the Chapelle of Playster, a known place on the Roade. It was heretofore a place of entertainment for Pilgrims that went to Glastonbury, to St. Joseph of Arimathea's Chapell. It is now an ale-house, the little Chapell yet remaines of it; on the outside, towards the highway, is, in the wall, a place for holy water.

Mem. That without Laford's gate at Bristowe, the great old house called was likewise for the entertainment of Pilgrims that went to Glastonbury. From Sir Henry Creswick.¹

ground called the burying place. [Gent. Mag. 1835. I. 145.] Stone coffins have been found here. The parishioners have now seats in the south transept of Box Church. The Lord of the Manor who is Tithe owner, pays Ten pounds a year to an absentee Rector of Haselbury.

The Spekes, whose arms in stone are still upon the pillars at the entrance gateway, settled here about 1613. They were not all supporters of the Crown: for it is entered in a Subsidy list for maintaining Charles Ist's army, that while George Speke Esq. of Box paid his money, Margaret his wife and Elizabeth his daughter were recusant. In 1627 the Crown presented John Hungerford to the Rectory, (for that turn.) Hugh Speke favoured Monmouth, and took an active part in the Restoration. Sir George was M.P. for Chippenham. There is a tradition that the Court, which is large and surrounded by a high wall, was used for some military purpose in the Civil Wars.

¹ This Chapel stands at the end of Corsham Ridge, on the high road from Corsham to Bradford and near the meeting of six different roads, leading to Bath, Devizes, &c.: a very unlikely situation for a "hermitage" such as Leland conceived it to have been. No account of it appears to be known more ancient than Aubrey's, which may perhaps be the true one; such chapels being said to have been traced elsewhere, as on the Pilgrim's road to Canterbury. [N. & Q. No. 47. p. 269.] The additional name of "Playster" is not taken from the outside material, as it is built of stone; but either from some founder (Plaister being an old Wilts name), or more probably (as the Rev. W. L. Nichols has suggested, N. & Q. VII. 145) from "play-stow" (Saxon, pleg-stow), an open space for village exercises. Brand [Antiq. II. 592] explains "Pleistor" to be "an area near the church": and in such a situation stands "the Pleistor oak" in White's Selborne. The Chapel consists of a chancel and nave, together 29 feet long by 9 feet 3 inches wide, with a porch, and North transept: a bell cot at the West end: a holy water stoup on South side of the door. Over the door but not quite in the centre, is a large niche of curious design; its sides pierced. The building appears to be of the date A.D. 1460—1480. It has long been desecrated: sometime used, as appears from an oven and large fireplace, as a dwelling, now a lumber room. Adjoining it is a small house, long known as a wayside inn, and many years ago the head quarters of John Poulter alias Baxter a noted highwayman, who, according to tradition, made a window at the side to command a view of the Corsham road; so as to be ready for arrivals. This was the man who robbed Dr. Hancock of Salisbury on Clarken down: and who in Salisbury jail confessed that he had put a pistol into the mouth of the corpse of Dr. Shakerley Dean of Wells, and another into his hand, which led to the verdict Felo de se, [Gent. Mag. 1755. "Highwayman."] The Chapel being in the parish of Box, some have thought it was once Haselbury church. The sinecure Rector of Haselbury, has to keep the roof of this chapel in repair. It belongs to Mr. Northey. There is some account of Chapel Playster, with two engravings, in Gent. Mag. 1835. p. 143.

¹ By gift of King Athelstan, A.D. 938. In Domesday Book the name is BREME: perhaps from its situation, bryme in Anglo Saxon being, "conspicuous." The Saxon boundaries of the "Bremel" given to Malmesbury Abbey, were,

"From Wrokecumbe to Merkendene, then along the water course to the Street, thence to Cadeburne: from the source of the said burne (stream) straight to Avene: along Avene to Christemalford: thence to Huckleam (Cook's Elm?): thence to the Great Tree, from the same to Sandsete, and so the Cliff: thence to Stizelway: from the way to Blackmore, and from the More to Wrokecumbe aforesaid."

In Athelstan's grant are mentioned "Chedecotun" (Charlcot): "Speerful" (Spirthill); Foxham, and Avene. The Abbot of Malmesbury had a grange here, which at the Dissolution was bought by the Bayntons of Bromham House.

Bremhill was a Rectory in A.D. 1217, in the gift of the Abbot. A little before the year 1228 the patronage was transferred to the Bishop of Sarum. A dispute having long existed between the Monastery and the Bishops as to the rights of Episcopal jurisdiction claimed by the latter, the Abbot claiming exemption, from the time of rebuilding Malmesbury Abbey, a commission was appointed by the Pope to settle the question. The Charter of Privileges having been produced, a composition was finally made by which the Monastery was declared to be for ever exempt from all subjection to the Bishop both in temporals and spirituals: in return for which concession the Monastery agreed to surrender to the See, the Manor of Highway, with the right of patronage of the Churches of Bremhill and Highway, and of the Chapel of Foxham. [Deed in Sarum Registry]. Highway is about five miles off, annexed to Bremhill. "Hiwi" is mentioned in Domesday Book as belonging to Ralph de Mortimer: and some land there is described as having been granted out for three lives. This is a very uncommon occurrence in that Record, and shews the great antiquity of that kind of Lease. In 38. Edw. III. (1364) a license was granted to the Rector and Brethren of Edington Monastery to hold the Manor of Hywey paying a fee farm rent of £10 a year to the Bishop of Sarum, and also, by way of "relief," 6s. 8d. upon every appointment of a new Rector of Edington Monastery. Three years afterwards the Monastery exchanged the Manor of "Hywey in the parish of Bremhill" for that of Bremelridge (near Westbury,) and the advowson of the Chantry of Heywood belonging to Sir Philip Fitzwaryn and Constance his wife. [See the Latin and French documents, Sir R. C. Hoare's Westbury, p. 61.]

The window is full of good old glass painting: being the 5 works of mercy, as buriall of the dead &c: on the dead corps is a cross crosslet.

In the south Aisle, in the top of the East windowe, Orate p. aia Johis Heth.³ He is drawne in green, kneeling like Judge Littleton,⁴ and a woman is drawn by him. In this Aisle are 12 Columnnes, (i.e. window lights) wherein are finely painted the 12 Apostles, every one with his Symbol of the Creed, and his cognizance in his hand. In this Aisle is this Coate in severall places, (No. 67).⁵ All the windowes have been very good. This Coat I also find in very old glass at Sir Richard Knight's house, at Chawton, in Hampshire, impaled with G. Lyon Rampant, Arg. HETH (?)

² In 1431 Robert Russell was Lord of the Manor of Tytherton Kellaways, part of which lay in Bremhill. [See "Tytherton Kellaways."]

³ The name of Heath is more familiarly connected with Bremhill, by Maud Heath's Causey, which begins at Wick Hill in this parish. See an account of it, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. 1. p. 251.

⁴ The engravings of Judge Littleton, the celebrated Lawyer, represent him in this attitude.

In the Chancell is an altar monument of Hungerford of Cadnam, modern,¹ viz. since the Reformation, and 2 Inscriptions of.....Trimnells; One of them was master of the Pettie Bag Office, who died 1640. In the middle, lies an old marble gravestone, called the Parson's stone. Vile, if the Inscription on it is in the Saxon character.²

CADENHAM is in Bremhill Parish.

Cadenham belonged to Priorie St. Marie's, juxta Kington St. Michael, given by Since the dissolution of the Abbeys it hath been in the possession of the Hungerfords, a younger branch of the Hungerfords of Downe Ampney.³

³ This is not quite correct. Priory St. Mary's had here [see Wilts Archæol. Mag. IV. p. 70] by gift of one Alexander of Studley, c. A.D. 1280, "his tithes of Cadenham; together with a place in his Barton of Cadenham to build a grange in"; the value of the tithes being only 18s. 8d. per annum at the Dissolution; when the whole property of that Priory was bought by the Longs of Draycote. The Manor of Cadenham does not appear to have been at any time church property. In Domesday Book it is mentioned as belonging to a Saxon Earl. In Edw. I. it was held by Roger de Addeley (Audley?) as of the Honour of Warwick. [T. de N.]

Before 1534, one William Crekelade had some estate in Cadnam and Studley. Sir William Wyndesor, Kt. of Bradenham, Bucks, and William Walrond of Langridge, Co. Somerset, were his next heirs. This seems to have been bought by Hall of Bradford, and to have descended by an heiress to Giles Gore of Aldrington. (Gore Deeds.) In 1504 Edward Hungerford, Esq., the first of this branch, by will dated in that year, left his estate at Cadnam to Robert his son and heir in

The Castle stands on a hill, North from the Towne, about a quarter of a mile, Tail. It consisted of about 400 acres; and was sold probably after the death of Sir George Hungerford in 1712, as it does not appear in wills of the family after that period. The older Mansion House of the Hungerfords at this place, near Foxham Green, seems to have been restored or rebuilt by Sir George, as on the house now standing, there are, together with his own, the arms and crest of his wife's family, Seymour: viz. a pair of wings; and a phoenix rising in flames out of a ducal coronet. John Evelyn visited Cadenham 16th July, 1654; the then owner Edward Hungerford being uncle to Evelyn's wife. "We did nothing but feast and make good cheer. One day went to Spye Park. After dinner to bowls: and in the meantime our coachman was made so exceedingly drunk that in returning home we escaped great danger. This it seems was by order of the Knight (Baynton) that all gentlemen's servants be so treated: but the custom is barbarous and unbecoming a Knight." One of the local traditions is, that in the time of the Hungerfords a running footman who had come all the way from London was so little fatigued that he danced in the hall after his journey.

¹ William Westbury, Justice of the Common Pleas, had land here 28. Hen. VI. Alice, wife of William Newburgh, 22. Edw. IV. The Abbot of Malmsbury had the Manor worth £22. 13s. 9d. a year; and some land given by Sibil, Agnes, and Matilda, three sisters of Hugh de Foxham. There was a chapel here before A.D. 1228. (See suprà "Bremhill" page 60, note 1.) In 1555 Andrew Baynton endowed St. John the Baptist's chapel with two houses called Church house and Priest house, and two parcels of land called the Chapel Hay and Butt Hay. In Mr. Bowles's Lacock p. 158, it is said that the Hungerfords charged some lands with £3 a year. Sir George Hungerford called it "his chapel" [Bowles p. 201]. See also "Charity Com. Reports."

² On the brow of the hill in the park opposite to the present House at Castle Combe is a long barrow: near which a great number of Roman coins have been found.

The History of this Manor and Ancient Barony, chiefly compiled from original Manuscripts and Cartularies preserved here, with Memoirs of the successive owners, the families of Dunstanville, Badlesmere, Tiptoft and Scrope, was published in 1852 in a quarto volume printed for private distribution, from the pen of George Poulett Scrope Esq. MP. It is the subject of an article in the area of it is about six acres; there are within the compass of it divisions, in one whereof, 'tis by tradition that there was kept the market. And on the hills in the park, were, Anno 1645, felled many a gallant oak.

The Castle, whereof now remains the Toft, strongly seated on a steep hill, was demolished in the time of the Danes; Jo. Scrope, Esqr. hath some old writings that mention so much. Q. what year. [A.D. 878.] Mem. get a Draught of the Castle Keep.¹

In the Church, in the North Aisle, is in the wall a handsome monument of a Chevalier lying crossed-legged, viz. right leg over the left, and mayled about the head, and armoured like the Knts. in the Temple-Church; at his feet a beast, doubtfull if a Lion or a Bear, but I guesse the former. On the side of this Monument, in 6 niches, stand so many little figures.²

the Quarterly Review, March 1853. In the Wilts. Archæol. Magazine, Vol. II. pp. 133 and 261, there is also by Mr. P. Scrope, an abridgment of the Manorial History: the outline of which is as follows:—

The manor belonged to the Dunstanville family, from Reginald Earl of Cornwall (natural son of Henry I.) A.D. 1135, to 1269: when it passed by their heiress Petronilla, to the Montforts: and was sold by them to Lord Badlesmere in A.D. 1309. On a partition of estates between four coheiresses of Giles Lord Badlesmere in A.D. 1339 it fell to the share of Margaret, wife of Sir John Tiptoft. After the death of Sir Robert Tiptoft A.D. 1372 there was another partition between three coheiresses. Millicent married Sir Stephen Scrope. She remarried the celebrated Captain in the French Wars, Sir John Fastolf, who held Castle Combe for his life, but did not reside there. In 1459 it reverted to the Scrope family in which it has continued to the present time.

Upon the Altar, scroll-wise; 1. [No. 76] SCROPE. 2. [No. 77] Quarterly, TIPTOFT and BADLESMERE.

Behind the Chancel is a strong place, perhaps for preserving records.

In the East Windowe of the Chancell there was, lately defaced, the coate of Sir John Falstaffe, who was second husband to Millicent, wife to Sir Stephen le Scrope, and daughter of Sir Robert Tiptoft. The coate is, [No 78].¹

² There is now only one bell.

⁴ Thus explained by Mr. P. Scrope in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 147. “The inhabitants of Castle Combe, although not incorporated by Royal Charter, enjoyed, however, from an early period, all the special rights and privileges which appertained by the Common Law to those Villages which belonged to the domain of the Crown in the Saxon era. These rights were conveyed under the terms, now scarcely intelligible, of Tol, Them, Sok, Sak, Infangthef, &c.: and were generally

In the middle of this Chapell lies a faire flatt marble stone, which had the effigies of two persons, and an Inscription underneath, and at the head two Escutcheons. Under this stone lies I suppose, the Hungerford that erected this Chapell, where questionless was a Chauntry. Qu. what Hungerford it was, and when. The roof is extraordinarily richly gilded.⁵

commonly called the Hungerford's, was built by Walter Lord Hungerford and Heytesbury, High Treasurer of England A.D. 1442: and a Chantry Priest endowed with 10 pounds a year to say Mass, &c. The founder was buried in Salisbury Cathedral. He had large estates round Chippenham and was Lord of the Manor and Hundred.

³ This inscription, to a Hungerford of a later branch, is not now to be seen. It was probably on the floor.

[See the Pedigree of Anstie, "Stanley Abbey."] How he came to be buried in this chapel does not appear: the adjoining one being called the Baynton chapel. On the top, is this inscription, which Aubrey does not appear to have noticed.

"Armiger hoc tumulo jacet hic generosus opaco,

The inhabitants say it was anciently a Borough. It hath its denomination from the petrified cockles which are in great plenty found in the stones here. Anciently London road was here, which is nearer than Chippenham, and in a straight line from Bristowe. *From Mr. W. Bayliffe of Mounkton.*¹

Mus.), says, that he saw in the windows 100 quarterings of the Seymour family, and also John Aubrey's "picture, in my Lord's parlour." Of the 100 quarterings he only took note of 21. They were as follows, 1, Seymour, Augmentation coat. 2, Seymour, ancient. 3, Damarell. 4, Beauchamp of Hache. 5, Vivonia, or De Fortibus. 6, Marshal, Earl of Warwick. 8, Marshal, Earl of Pembroke. 9, Strongbow, Earl of Pembroke. 10, De Clare. 11, Gifford, Earl of Buckingham. 12, M'Morough, King of Leinster. 13, Bolebec. 14, Delamere, of Bedfordshire. 15, Esturny. 16, Hussey, Or, a cross vert. 17, Hussey, Barry of six, erm. and gules. 18, Macwilliams. 19, Coker. 20, Grey, Duke of Suffolk, bringing in, 21, Fitzosborn Earl of Hereford; "and other quarterings of Grey;" but the rest Wm. Aubrey neglected to take.

Allington Common was enclosed 1860.

¹ In 1299 some land at "Cokelberge" was held of the Earl of Cornwall, as of the Honour of Wallingford. (I. p. M.) The Cobham family then owners of Langley Burrell had some interest here in 1319: and a tenement formerly belonging to Monkton Farley Priory, and then to the Duke of Somerset, was granted by the Crown in 1570 to Cicely widow of John Pickerill of Norwich. Gandersdych in Cokelbergh, occurs in a deed of 1336.

ROWDON HOUSE. (In Ditto.)

In the parish of Chippenham. Rowdon House was a large well built Gothique house, square, and a court within; about the house a mote; a fair hall very well furnished with armour. Here were a number of scutcheons in the windows. This was a Garrison in the late civill wars for the Parliament, where Col. Stephens, of Estington, in Gloucestershire, was Governor: it was taken by A.D. 164... and burnt.³ In the walles of the court are these escutcheons, in stone, as at of Yatton. There are several deeds relating to it in the Malmesbury Chartulary, Add. MSS. 15667. p. 110. In later times it was the property of the Jacob family, of Norton: and was purchased from their representative Sir Robert Jacob Buxton by the late Joseph Neeld Esq., of Grittleton.

¹ There seems to be no authority for this tumulus having ever been even called "Hubba's Low" (i.e. the burial tumulus of Hubba, the Dane). It is merely the name that Aubrey gave it, because his neighbour at Kington St. Michael, Sir Charles Snell "told him so." Hubba was most likely buried where the Chronicles say he was slain, in Devonshire. See, Hoare's Anc. Wilts. ii. 99; and a minute account of this barrow by Dr. Thurnam, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 67. The common name is Lan Hill (Long Hill) barrow. It is three miles N. W. of Chippenham in a meadow on the left of the high road leading to Marshfield. It is a heap of stones about sixty paces in length, covered with turf. For the convenience of obtaining road materials it has been much injured.

COLERN.

V. Etym. Danic.³

Here is a most noble prospect, a stately high well built tower, which, when the bells, which are new cast, ring, shakes much. A very faire church, but nothing ticalars of the siege may be found in the "Historical Relation of the Military Government of Gloucester, by John Corbet, Preacher of God's Word, 1645."

The House had been garrisoned for the Parliament, to counteract the Royalists of Devizes Castle. But before it was well settled and provisioned, the Royalists set upon and sorely straightened it. Col. Stephens, Governor of Beverston Castle near Tetbury, came to its relief, and with difficulty got into it, but whilst he had alighted unwarily and was refreshing himself, the Royalists threw up a breastwork before the entrance and so coopd him in. Succour not arriving in time, he and his party of 430 men inside became desperate and surrendered upon quarter for their lives.

² Anciently Shulldham or Shuldene. For its history See Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. p. 28.

³ The etymology is not Danish but Anglo-Saxon: in which language Col is cold, and ærn (when ending a word), habitation.

In a ground in this parish called The Allotments, a Roman villa was laid open in 1854: a plan and description of which, by Mr. E. W. Godwin, are given in the Archæol. Journal, 1856, p. 328.

In the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. II. 269 there is a notice of the Manorial History: to which may be added that during a temporary forfeiture by Bartholomew de Badlesmere of Castle Combe, his estate here was granted by Edw. II. in 1322 to Hugh le Despencer, Senior. At a later period, 1370, being then the property of the Burghersh family, it was leased by Margaret widow of Bartholomew Lord Burghersh (and then wife of Sir William Burcestre Kt.), for term of her life, to Sir Thomas Hungerford. At her death c. 1380 it went to Elizabeth the heiress of Burghersh, then wife of Edward le Despencer, as part of her inheritance: from whom it was purchased, 11. Rich. II. by William of Wykeham, and has since belonged to Winchester College.

In BURYWOOD is a Camp, double workes; ergo, not Roman but British: very large, and the graffes are very deepe, notwithstanding the rocke. It hath an aperture, West, towards Colerne downe. It stands on a kind of Promontory, and every other side is well secured by the precipice. A prettie cleare little streame runs on the rock, and gravell in each bottome.²

At Colern Parke, above Slaughtenford, they tell me there is a single workes camp: i.e. Roman, which see.

Mem. At Ford-hill is a rampard with graffe eastward, but no camp; it was to obstruct the enemies comeing; the like whereof is to be seen in severall other places. — Q. If the trench aforementioned, at Colerne Parke, is not of the same nature?

There was a William of Colerne, Abbot of Malmesbury, who died in 1296. He was famous for his zeal in improving the creature comforts of the monks, and in a Register of that Abbey preserved in the Exchequer, he is stated to have planted vineyards, laid out gardens, made fishponds, and when he instituted an Anniversary for himself, his father and mother, he directed that with the money a cask of the best wine should also be bought, and first tasted on that day. (New Mon.) In Malmesbury Abbey Register there is also a Deed (No. 132) of composition between Osbert de Colerna and the Monks of that House.

¹ Mr. E. W. Godwin, Architect, has described, with several illustrations, the church of St. John Baptist. [Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 358.] In 1857 a stained glass East window was placed in memory of Mary, wife of the Rev. Gilbert Heathcote (the present vicar). She died April 2, 1854.

The late Mr. Bowles in his History of Bremhill (p. 259) says, "a late friend of mine, Lawson Huddleston, of Shaftesbury, with many and extraordinary accomplishments, had a kind of passion for bells. To oblige any clerical friend who had six bells in his church, he would pass days and weeks in the belfry, chipping, and modulating the sound of every bell, till they answered exactly the intervals of the monochord. I had often heard of the music of Colerne bells. No one could tell why their sounds were so pleasing. It is because they are perfectly tuned . . . Huddleston was sent to school at Colerne, and Colerne bells were the first he tuned."

² Bury Wood Camp is a very strong military position; of which Sir Richard C. Hoare gives a plan and description, Ancient Wilts II. p. 103. See also Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 79, and IV. 304.

Colerne downe is the place so famous and frequented for stoball playing. The turfe is very fine, and the rock is within an inch and a half of the surface, which gives the ball so quick a rebound.

They smite the ball with a staffe, commonly made of withy about three feet and a half long. A stobball-ball is of about four inches diameter, stuffed very hard with quills, sowed into soale leather, and as hard as a stone. I doe not hear it is used but hereabout and in Gloucestershire adjacent.²

THICK-WOOD. (In Ditto.)

In this manor Wills are proved and recorded in the Court Rolles.⁴

² Stow-ball or Stool-ball is described by Strutt, [Sports and Pastimes p. 103] as a variety of the game more commonly known as "goff" or "bandy-ball:" the paganica of the Romans, who also stuffed their ball with feathers.

⁴ This Farm certainly does not at present correspond with its name, except on the principle of "mons a non movendo," and "lucus a non lucendo;" being almost tree-less. A Manor called "Ticoode" belonged at the Conquest to the great Wilts proprietor Edward of Salisbury. In Hen. VI. Stanley Abbey near Chippenham had some land here to maintain a chantry at Highworth. [I. p. M.] The chief estate, given by John son of William Le Lung, belonged to Malmesbury Abbey, which paid thereout 6s. 10d. a year to New College Oxford. [Val. Ecc.] By a will of one of the Fisher family of Worcester, Thickwood, then about 108 acres, was left in 1769 to John Oseland who sold it to Paul Methuen Esq. 1780. In 1796 it was sold to John Clements of co. Tyrone. In 1806 to R. B. Deverill: and in 1830 by Mrs. Parsons to the late A. C. Boodé Esq. father of the present owner J. Christian Boodé Esq. of Lucknam.

LUCKNAM (properly Luckenham) which adjoins Thickwood, was divided in I. John between William Fitz Osbert and Roger de Limoges. It belonged in 1732 to Ezekiel Wallis. By his widow Cecilia (Selfe) it passed to her sister's son, Mr. Paul Methuen: was sold in 1796 by his son to John Clements, whose widow sold it in 1807 to William Norris Tonge: by whom in 1827 it was sold to the late Mr. Boodé.

¹ "Ywerig," or "Ewrugge," was given by K. Athelstan to Malmesbury Abbey, at the time of the grant of Bremhill. Annual offerings from this farm, at the shrine of St. Leonard, in Malmesbury Abbey Church, are mentioned in the Vulor. At the Dissolution it was granted to — Lucas. In later times it belonged to Mr. Deverill, and was bought of Mrs. Parsons by the late Mr. Boodé. "Yew-trees grow indifferently plentiful," says Aubrey, Nat. Hist. of Wilts. 55. The manor was sometimes called "Euridge cum Yatton." See "Yatton Keynes."

² Corsham was a Manor both of the Saxon and early Norman Kings: hence called Ancient Demesne. King John gave it to his second son Richard Plantagenet, Earl of Cornwall, King of the Romans and Almaine, and to the heirs of his body by Sanchia his wife. The tenants of the Crown at that time held their lands by certain debasing services. From these the Earl of Cornwall relieved them by a Deed by which he granted to them the lands in fee farm, free of those Services: paying annually to the Lord 110 marks. From that time the "farmers in fee" held their lands to them and their heirs: elected a Bailiff (who was also Coroner and Sheriff) of their own, in lieu of the Earl's: had their lands tried in their own Court by Writ of right and not by the common law: were exempt from serving on Juries, except in their own Manor, &c. The Earl's grant is still preserved in the Manor Chest: and has been printed in Collect. Topogr. and Geneal. ii. 317. In this Deed he reserved "the site of his "Vinarium," or "Vivarium," his parks, and Conigere (or Warren), and the third part of Minty-mead." Before his time Corsham Manor used to do suit at the Hundred Court of Chippenham, but the Earl refused. (H. Rolls.) He died 1271. His son Edmund, Earl of Cornwall, held it 1299, and died without issue. This estate, with the Castle of Mere, and others, then reverted to the Crown. Prynne (p. 937) says that in 1301 (30. Ed. I.) the King's daughter Mary having taken the veil at Ambresbury Nunnery, manors (including this), to the amount of £200 a year were settled on her. In 1307 it was granted by Edw. II. to his favourite Piers Gaveston. [Rymer. iii. 3.] In 1333 John de Horwode was Keeper of the Manor, in which was a House called the Grange. In 1358 King Edward III. and his Queen spent the summer between Marlborough and Corsham. It was then settled by Edw. III. upon his daughter Isabella, who married Ingelram de Courcy (created Earl of Bedford) one of the French hostages detained in England after the battle of Poitiers. Afterwards it formed part of the Dowry of several Queens of England, and hence is called in Deeds, "Corsham Regis," and sometimes "Corsham Reginae." Under the Queens it was held by different families successively. In 14. Eliz. the lands called Corsham Parks were granted to Sir Christopher Hatton. Three years afterwards, 1575, the manor was sold to Thomas Smyth an ancestor of Lord Strangford, (son of John Smyth of Corsham who married Mary Brounker of Melksham). Being Farmer of the Customs he obtained the name of "Customer Smyth." He built the oldest part of the present House in 1582, and removed from Wilts to Ostenhanger in Kent, leaving Corsham to his third son Henry. A shield of arms carved in wood, Smyth quartering Judde, was dug up in the grounds a few years ago. This was the coat of Henry Smyth; his father, the Customer, having married a daughter of Sir Andrew Judde, Lord Mayor of London. Henry Smyth sold Corsham in 1602 to Edward Hungerford of Rowdon (near Chippenham) afterwards Sir Edward, of Farley Castle, who died 1607. In that family it remained till 1684 when it was sold by the extravagant Sir Edward to Richard Kent Esq. M.P. for Chippenham. In 1694 it was again sold to Richard Lewis Esq. of Edington Priory who was buried in Corsham Church in 1706, in which year it was again sold by his son Thomas Lewis to the executors of Henry Frederick Thynne Esq. In 1719 it was sold to Mr. Joseph Stiles who by his will bequeathed it to his brother Benjamin Haskins Stiles. He died 1733, and it passed to his nephew Francis, son of Sir John Eyles, Bart. This nephew changed his name to Haskins Stiles Eyles. From this family it was purchased in 1746 by Paul Methuen Esq. great grandfather of the present owner, Lord Methuen. Corsham House was greatly altered on the North side by the late Mr. Repton: and in 1844 this part was taken down and a new Front made, by Mr. Bellamy.

The Rectory Manor.

In the Liberty of Corsham there is, besides the "King's Manor," the Rectory Manor, with a Bailiff of its own: but doing service at the King's manor court. The History of the Rectory is perplexing. It was given by King William I. to the Monastery of St. Stephen at Caen. Being Alien it was liable to seizure. Hen. II. gave it to the Abbey of Marmonstier in Touraine, to which Tickford Priory (near Newport Pagnell in Bucks) was a cell. Then we find it given by Hen. VI. to King's College, Cambridge, as "part of the possessions of St. Stephen's, at Caen." Edw. IV. gave it to the Monastery of Our Lady of Syon. At the Dissolution it was granted to Philip Moore. Lately it belonged to the Neale family: now to G. Goldney Esq. The foreign Priorities would probably have a small subordinate one here: and the site of a Priory house is pointed out.

In the South East corner of the church is the “Consistory,” once railed off by a screen of wood-work. The spire was taken down in 1812. The church is Norman; two of the arches on the South side have been cut away to make one larger one. The old vicarage stood in the church yard. The present one, in the street, was built by Mr. Methuen. Some lands called “Lady Lands” were anciently given to provide “Our Lady’s Priest” for a chantry. In 1548 the commissioners for suppression of chantries, report (naming the lands) that they were worth clear 3. 14. 1: that one William Lewys was the chantry Priest, an honest man aged 60 years, with no other living and not able to serve a cure: that the parish was very large, the vicarage very small, and no one but this stipendiary to help the vicar, and that the lands had been given for the purpose of providing this assistance.

At the back of the late George Inn is an old Roman bas-relief of six figures, dug up on the spot. Domesday Book mentions a church of Paveshou adjoining Corsham Manor. According to the Tropenell MSS. there was a chapel of St. John the Baptist at Chapel Knap.

¹ The Chapel (Saint Mary’s?) on the North side of Corsham Church was most probably built by the Tropenells, owners of Great Chalfield, Neston, &c. and it belonged to their successors, the Eyres and Hanhams. Some account of the Tropenells is printed in “Walker’s History of Chalfield,” derived from extracts out of a MS. called “The Book of Tropenell,” now missing. This Book, which Aubrey often alludes to, was in the custody of Mr. Dickinson of Monk’s in 1744. It was supposed to have been afterwards in the hands either of a Mordaunt family or of the Neales, owners of Great Chalfield: but Sir H. B. Neale (1837) did not possess it. [“Frustfield” p. 118]. It was written on vellum; commencing “Allhallwyn Day 4. Edw. IV. (1464):” and related to the pedigree and estates of Thomas Tropenell Esq., reciting however many charters and grants long before his time concerning other Lordships, towns, and estates. The property of the Tropenell family in 1519 was as follows. The Manor and Advowson of Great Chalfield, together with the office of Constable of Trowbridge Castle; and lands in Great Atworth, Little (alias Cottle’s) Atworth, Lynford, Holt, and Broughton Gifford: the Manor of Maiden Bradley, and lands at East and West Codford. The manors of Chicklade (with the advowson), and Hindon, and lands in Knoyle Episcopi and Milton: the Manor of East Harnham and lands in Homington: the Manor of Little Durnford and lands at Old Sarum and Fisherton Aucher: the Manor of Neston, with the Chapel of St. John the Baptist there and an enclosure adjoining it in the Ridge, and lands at Upton, Stratford sub Castro, Hartham, and “Cosham land:” with divers messuages in Chippenham and Pewsham, Allington, Longdean, Great and Little Sherston, Castle Combe, Lockridge, Kington St. Michael’s, Tollard and New Sarum. Also the Advowson of Great Cheverell, and lands at Bourton co. Gloucester, Kilmersdon, and Hassage, near Littleton co. Somerset. In the year last named, 1519, Sir Edward Hungerford, Philip Baynard and John Ernley were Trustees of these estates for some minor of the Tropenell family. [See Add. MSS. 6363 p. 175. Brit. Mus.]

The heraldry seen by Aubrey in the windows, related for the most part to families allied by marriage with the owners of the Chapel and of CHALFIELD. That estate came by an heiress of Percy to the Tropenells. Thomas Tropenell the fifth in descent married (Agnes or) Margaret Ludlow of Hill Deverill. Their grand-daughter, a coheiress, married John Eyre of Wedhampton, (see Matcham’s Hundred of Frustfield p. 56), and, after several descents, Jane Eyre married Sir William Hanham. The Hungerford arms were perhaps introduced on account of an old match with Percy.

The noble altar-tomb described by Aubrey, and still in the chapel, is that of Thomas Tropenell, the husband of (A. or) M. Ludlow, and the projector of Great Chalfield Manor House. He died

HARTHAM.¹ (In Corsham Parish.)

The Conigre (Rabbit-warren) here turns the breed of black conies white, and the pasture grounds make the breed of black cattle pied. (In his Nat. Hist. of Wilts. Aubrey adds, "Let him that knows this, believe it.") The rest of this country hereabout is much inclined to pied cattle, but commonly the colour is black, or browne, or deepe red: the men and woemen strong, and something warme and well-coloured, a drawning speech, something heavy and melancholy, as under Saturn.

1490. The Tomb, with details, is engraved in Walker's Chalfield. There is a smaller tomb, not mentioned by Aubrey, against the South wall, on which are the arms [No. 125]: the wife apparently a Carew.

The Chapel is now considered appurtenant to Neston, the property of J. B. Fuller Esq. NESTON House is in the parish of Corsham, close to the line of the Roman Road, more anciently the Wansdyke. In the Hall is a shield of arms, Fuller and Jeanes quarterly, impaling Hanning and Harward quarterly. In the Dining room among other portraits is one of Thomas Gooch D.D. Master of Caius College Cambridge and Bishop of Ely.

¹ Hartham is in the parish of Corsham. It was however no part of the King's "Ancient demesne" enfranchised by the Earl of Cornwall (see p. 78, Note 2.) There are no less than six notices under the name of "Heortham" in Domesday Book, all of which appear to refer to this small hamlet. There were four superior lords. The Crown, the Earl of Salisbury, a Saxon Earl Hugo, and the Barony of Castle Combe. All traces of this distinction soon disappear. The Earl of Sarum's portion passed to the Bohuns, who gave it to Monkton Farley Priory. The Dunstanvilles of Castle Combe probably disposed of theirs in the same way. The rest belonged about A.D. 1400 to "Henry de Hartham," owner also of Alderton (see p. 51, Note 1.) and in 1457 both those estates had been purchased by the Gores. From 1640 until later times, there were two principal families, Goddard and Duckett. The former owned the present Hartham Park and Rudlow. Their house stood on the site of the present one, which was built by Lady James, widow of Sir William James a Naval Officer in H. E. I. Company's service and afterwards a Director, who died 1783. [Ext. Barts]. She was Anne surviving daughter and coheir of Edward Goddard Esq. of this place (eldest son of the Rev. Thomas Goddard, Canon of Windsor). Her only daughter married Lord Raneliffe. Lady James was buried at Eltham in Kent. By her will dated 16 June, 1798, she left £1000 for the benefit of the Poor of Corsham, Pickwick and Biddeston.

The residence of the Ducketts was called Hartham House. It stood very near the other on the side towards Biddeston. It was bought by Mr. Joy and taken down some years ago. Sir Benjamin Hobhouse (father of Lord Broughton) lived there about 65 years since: afterwards General Kerr, and Walter Long Esq. The Duckett family was descended from Richard Duket (a Judge, 9. Hen. III.) of co. Lincoln. A descendant, by marriage with the daughter of Lord Windesore obtained [Rich. II.] Grayrigg, co. Westm. A later descendant, William, was of Flintham co. Nottingham. His son Sir Lionel was Lord Mayor of London 1573. Stephen

MONK'S.¹ (In Corsham Parish.)DITCHRIDGE.²

In this Church nothing to be found. Parson Bridges says Sir Hugh Speke told him that he searched in the Black Booke—I believe it was Domesday Book—q., and Duckett, grandson of John, was of Calston House near Calne [See above p. 40]. His grandson William, M.P. for Calne, removed to Hartham House c. 1650. All the sons of the last generation died without issue. They had two sisters, one of whom, Grace, married 1. George Goldstone, and 2. John Walton. Mrs. Goldstone's daughter (by the first husband) Grace, married 1. Robert Neale Esq. of Shaw House near Melksham, and 2. Sir George Jackson. His wife being the heiress of the Duckett family, Sir George by Royal licence and in pursuance of the will of her maternal uncle Thomas Duckett of Hartham who died 1765, assumed the name and arms of Duckett in 1797. He died 1822 aged 97. Michael Joy Esq. having purchased the estate of Lady James, Hartham was much improved by his son the late Henry Hall Joy Esq. Q.C. Soon after his death it was purchased by the first Lord Methuen who had already bought the principal part of the Duckett estate. Hartham Park has since become the property and residence of Thomas Henry Allen Poynder Esq. of Hilmerton, who made a large addition to the House in 1860.

¹ This property perhaps takes its name from a Henry Monk who is mentioned in a record of A.D. 1358 as owner of a Messuage and Yardland in the tything of More. John Ayliffe was owner about 1590. His daughter Susan married John Danvers of Sherston Pinkney, afterwards of Tockenham. In 1684 a descendant, John Danvers Esq. was here: who probably sold it to Arthur Esmead. "Monk's" afterwards belonged to Mr. Dickinson of Bowdon. Now to Mr. Harman.

In Corsham parish there is also a small estate called JAGGARD'S, properly JACQUARD'S, from an ancient family. The old-fashioned house now there, appears, from the initials R. K. with the date of 1657 over a chimney-piece, to have been built by Richard Kington. Mary the daughter of John Kington was wife of John Shore. Their daughter Mary Shore married the Rev. Thomas Leir, Rector of Charlton Musgrave in 1781: to whose descendant Thomas Macie Leir, this place now belongs. There is upon the premises a fine old Dovecot: an appendage to country-houses, to which our forefathers attached much importance.

² Now corrupted into Ditteridge; a very small parish near Box. It was one of 17 Lordships given by the Conqueror to William de Ow: under whom it was held by one Warner. The Abbot of Malmesbury had been before that time owner of a hide of land, which he had alienated to one Alestan. Among the notices of owners here, are William Lupus [Ed. I.] under the Earl Marshal. Richard Pembridge [49. Edw. III.]. John Blount of Bitton [22. Hen. VI.]. Two estates (very small, for the whole parish is under 400 acres) appear to have descended regularly. The first from Sir Bogo de Knoville [Baron by writ 1295] to the Mauduits, Lords of Warminster: by their heiress Matilda, to Sir Henry Grene of Drayton co. Northampton, and by his daughter found that William the Conqueror gave this Parish to one of his soldiers; and that C years after, Box Church was built by the Earle of Hereford. — V. Domesday.

and heiress Constance, to Edward Stafford Earl of Wilts, who in 1493 was patron of the church. 2. Another fragment of the hamlet belonged [Edw. III.] to the Pavely family of Westbury: from them by marriage to Sir Ralph Cheney. [See Deed of partition of Pavely estates; "Hoare's History of Westbury," 63, 64]. In 9. Hen. VI. Sir Edmund Cheney. Close to Ditchridge (but in the parish of Box) is a well-windowed old house called "CHENEY COURT" commanding a beautiful view over the valley towards Bath. There is an old-fashioned hall wainscotted, and, broad staircase. It was probably built by the Spekes, Lords of the Manor of Box (see above pp. 57, 59), as on a chimney-piece on the ground-floor is a shield of Speke. In the room above, another shield of Speke impaling Luttrell (viz. a bend engrailed between six martlets). The house now belongs to Mr. Northey: who is also owner of Ditchridge, and patron of the Living. Ditchridge church, in which Aubrey saw nothing, has met with more justice in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. 146 from Mr. E. W. Godwin; with two plates showing its Norman Door, Font, &c. Some fresco paintings on the North wall are described in Gent. Mag. Oct. 1854. The church was restored in 1860 chiefly by the Rev. W. N. Heathcote, Rector. "Parson Bridges" may have been either Richard B. Rector 1636-74; or Charles, Rector 1674-84. There are some monuments of this name.

The shield of Nevill, perhaps refers to the Earls of Warwick, at one time landowners in the adjoining Parish of Sherston.

Easton, (and Foxley adjacent,) belonged at the Conquest to Roger de Berkeley, (of the original family, whose name was afterwards assumed by Fitz-Harding.) It derives its second name from a subsequent owner Sir John de Grey [Hen. III.] founder of the House of Grey of Wilton on Wye co. Hereford. How it was forfeited to the Crown in the reign of Henry VIII. does not appear: but in 1541 there was a grant to John Ady. [Jones's Index]. Thomas Hodges (Q. Hodges) Esq. was owner and patron 1565. William Parry Esq. died owner 1684. In the church are several inscriptions to this family. Walter Parry Esq. took the name of Hodges as heir to his maternal great uncle Dr. Walter Hodges, Provost of Oriel College. He sold the estate to the late Thomas Smith Esq. Graham Smith Esq. is now the owner.

The Patronage of the Living belonged to St. Peter's Abbey Gloucester, down to the Dissolution. The old parsonage house is near the church. The new one at some distance, was built by the present Rector, the Rev. W. S. Birch. A brook called the "Ewer" runs through the parish into the Avon.

KINGTON (WEST.)¹

In this parish is a downe, called Ebdowne, westward from the Church, where is a Roman Camp, ... acres; (it has no graff; a slight rampart; no vestigia of any ports. Mon. Brit.): and on the other hill opposite to it, another lesser Roman Camp. Vid. Chorograph. antiq.

¹ In 1244 (28 Hen. III.) the Manor of West Kington belonged to Hugh de Vivoin (de Vironiá), Steward under Hen. III. of Poitou, Aquitaine and Gascony. He obtained for it a market every week, and a fair for 3 days every year on the vigil, day, and morrow of St. Dunstan. He had two sons William surnamed de Fortibus, and Hugh. William had four daughters. Hugh had one son, John de Vivoin, who died s.p. 1314 seised of the Manor. It then reverted to the daughters of William, or their representatives. These were found to be only two: viz. Peter Fitz-Reginald son of Joan de Vivoin, and Cicely (Vivoin) widow of John Lord Beauchamp of Hache. Each of these had a moiety.

The moiety of Fitz-Reginald descended to Fitz-Roger by whom it was held in 1385. The moiety of Beauchamp was again divided in 1360 on the death of John, last Lord Beauchamp of Hache, s.p., between his sisters Cicely, and Eleanor wife of Meryot. John Meryot son of Eleanor, in 1379 sold his share to Sir William Bonville of Shute co. Devon. Cicely the heiress of the Bonvilles married John Grey, Marquis of Dorset, and in 1502 this portion was still in the Grey family.

Some account of Vivoin may be found in Hutchins's Dorset II. 122. See also Coll. Top. et Gen. VII. 137: and, for Bonville, C. T. and G. VIII. 237. 242.

In 1443—1476 a small part of West Kington belonged to the Blounts of Bitton. In 1565 the family of Ivey are found settled here: (but the name of Adam Yve occurs to a very old deed without date in which William Gernun of West Kington appears owner of La Breche near the Foss.)

Sir George Ivy, of this place, married Susanna daughter of Lawrence Hyde Esq. of West Hatch, and Aunt to Lord Chancellor Clarendon. [In "Lord Clarendon's Life," 8vo p. 2 the name of Ivy is misprinted Fuy.] Sir George was buried in Bath Abbey church, 1 April 1639. His epitaph, containing an account of his family, is printed in "Antiq. of Abbey Ch. of Bath," p. 179.

An estate at West Kington belonged in 1628 to Sir Richard Grobham of Great Wishford: from whom it descended to John Howe, fourth Lord Chedworth, who died 1804. This was sold to different purchasers. [See "Nettleton."] Christopher Codrington Esq. was Lord of the Manor in 179-.

In the walk at the Parsonage House is a little scrubbed hollow oak called “Latimer’s Oak,” where he used to sit. Mon. Brit.)²

In the South Aisle of the Church,³ on the wall—

¹These two brothers, Robert and Sir William, were related to John Davenant, Bishop of Salisbury. Their father kept the Crown Tavern at Oxford. Their mother (Jane Sheppard of Durham) Aubrey [Lives of Eminent Men, II. 303,] says, “was a beautiful woman of very good wit, and conversation extremely agreeable, but (see the Original MS. of the “Lives”) of somewhat light report.” It was the belief of many that Sir William Davenant was really the son of Shakespeare, who used to frequent that Tavern on his journeys to Warwickshire. “Sir William was very well content to be so thought.” Robert Davenant, [Aubrey’s “Parson Robert”] the Rector of West Kington, was Fellow of St. John’s College Oxford, Prebendary of Sarum, and Chaplain to Bishop John Davenant. According to Aubrey (Lives), the Rector had two sisters of whom one married Gabriel Bridges B.D. of Corpus Christi College, beneficed in Berkshire: the other, Dr. Sherborne of Pembroke co. Hereford, and Canon of that Cathedral: but according to the Davenant Pedigree in Matcham’s “Frustfield” p. 86, Mrs. Sherborne was the only sister. Sir W. Davenant once spent a week at West Kington, “mirth, wit, and good cheer flowing,” in the midst of which the former wrote, “upon the table of the parlour, a Treatise on Socinianism!” [Lives II. 550.]

²Hugh Latimer was instituted to this Rectory in 1530 by the celebrated Cardinal Campegio then Bishop of Sarum. He remained about 5 years. His letters to Sir Edward Baynton of Bromham are written from this place [“Brit. Reformers,” Life of Latimer.] In them he speaks [p. 406] of “his little Bishoprick of West Kington,” [p. 423] of the “Lord of Farley,” (Prior of Monkton Farley); and in another letter, (p. 398), “As for pilgrimage, you would wonder what juggling there is to get money withal. I dwell within half a mile of the Fosseway, and you would wonder to see how they come by flocks out of the west country to many images, but chiefly to the blood of Hailes” (Hales Abbey, co. Gloucester.)

Among other incumbents here, were, in 1363 Stephen Kynesman, Prior of Stamford co. Linc, Rector by exchange: and in 1706 Thomas Burnett D.D. Prebendary of Sarum and Rector also of Littleton Drew. He was of New College Oxon: author of “A Treatise on Scripture Politics,” “A course of Sermons preached at Boyle’s Lecture,” “A Catechism,” &c., “Answer to Tindal,” and “Essay on the Trinity,” from which last work his ideas were borrowed by Matz. [See Mosheim.]

³The church, in the shape of a Greek cross, and dedicated to St. Mary, is of Early English date. The Rectory was always in the gift of the Bishops of Salisbury, but by an Order in Council 1852 it has been transferred to the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, this part of Wilts being now in that Diocese. On the death of the Rev. Edward Ravenshaw Dec. 1854, the late Bishop Monk collated the Rev. G. N. Barrow, Hon. Canon of Bristol, by whose exertions the church was restored, and re-opened 16 Oct. 1856. Latimer's pulpit is preserved, and a stained glass window on the South side of the chancel has been erected to his memory, being the gift of Mr. G. W. Gabriel of Bristol, the Architect of the Church restoration.

In 1444 Henry VI. granted to King's College Cambridge (subject to the life of John Mershton) a Pension of 100s. a year, formerly paid out of the church of West Kington to the Alien Priory of Fulgeis, or "de Fugeriis," in France.

² A History of Lacock Abbey, by the Rev. W. L. Bowles and Mr. J. G. Nichols, was published in 1835. The Rev. G. Witham, Roman Catholic Domestic Chaplain to the Dowager Lady Shrewsbury, with types and a press of his own at the Abbey, printed in 1806 a small 4to of 44 pages, consisting chiefly of extracts from Dugdale, &c., but it was never published. A view of the Cloisters is in "Britton's Archit. Antiq." II. 112. On the Abbey Seal the House is called the "Convent of the Blessed Mary and of St Bernard of Lacoc." In the New Monasticon, p. 501, it is called, perhaps by mistake, a "Priory."

⁴ Joanna Temys, or Temmes, of a family then owners of Rood Ashton.

In Bibliotheca Cottoniana there is an old 4to. MS. called "Chronicon de Lacock,"¹ wherein are divers Antiquities, and particularly Ela's life, Countess of Salisbury, the Foundresse, who outlived her understanding, being above an hundred yeares of age.²

In the kitchin is a vast great pott, or crock, which served the Abbey; it is bigger, much, than Guy's at Warwick Castle. By the Inscription, it appears to have been made at Mechlin.³

Mem. The high wall, with battlements, on the South side of the Cloysters, was the North wall of the Abbey Church, of which no vestigium is now left. Here was a good ring of bells, which Sir Sharington sold, when he built Rea-bridge to divert the travelling by his house. The ringers took their leave of the bells of the Abbey, when they were to be taken down, which was on the first of May, .AD.... This country Rythme was made upon it:—

¹ This "Chronicon de Lacock" is believed to have been destroyed at a Fire in the year 1731 which seriously injured the Cottonian MSS. Part of it is copied in Vincent's Collection in the College of Arms; and is printed in Bowles and Nichols, Appendix I—V. For extracts, see also Dodsworth's MSS. Bodl. Lib. Oxon. No CXXVI, and Harl. MSS. 5019. f. 231. Many deeds from Mr. Talbot's Cartulary are printed in Bowles and Nichols: some relating to Chitterne (one of the Abbey estates) in Hoare's Heytesbury, p. 169. The Commissioners of Public Records in Appendix to Report 1857, p. 158, mention "A ledger Book of the Monastery of Lacock."

² She died 24 August 1261 "in her seventy fourth year." Bowles and Nichols, p. 275.

³ See in Bowles and Nichols an engraving of the "Nun's Boiler," p. 360. The inscription is, "A PETRO WAGHUENS IN MECHLINIA EFFVSUS FACTUS VE FUERAM, ANNO MILLESSIMO QUINGENTESSIMO. DEO LAUS ET GLORIA CHRISTO." ["I was molten or made by Peter Waghuens of Mechlin in the year 1500. Praise be to God and glory to Christ."] The Boiler now stands on a pedestal in the garden, where it was placed, according to an indignant inscription, in consequence of the Window Tax. "Ne totum lateret hoc veteris Hospitii Monumentum, (Proh pudor! oclusis fenestris) sub aprico voluit positum J. Talbot, 1747." ["That this relic of ancient hospitality might not be altogether lost to sight (the windows—Oh shame!—being blocked up,) J. Talbot has caused it to be set up in the open air."] One of the traditions of Lacock is, that a side of bacon and a sack of peas were boiled in it on the occasion of Queen Anne's visit. There was formerly a larger one, of bell metal, 7 feet in diameter, which was disposed of in 1716. The great stone trough more than 10 feet long, sunk in the floor of the apartment now called the Nun's Kitchen, may have been used either for fattening captive fish, or for salting meat.

“On Philip and Jacob, the bells rang at Lacock,
 “The great bell went with such a surge, that he fell in at Rea-burge.”

This rhyme, as bad as it is, was used in evidence at Sarum Assizes, at the trial for pulling down Rea-bridge, which was about 165—.

Sharington was King Henry the Eighth's Taylor. He married the mother, and his brother (Henry) married the daughter. Upon the dissolution of the Abbeyes, for certaine causes and considerations, King Henry the 8th gave him Lacock, Seene, &c.¹ Arms of Sharington, [Pl. viii. No. 146.]

¹ Aubrey makes an odd blunder in calling Sir William Sherington the King's tailor. Sir William certainly had an evil reputation for “clipping and shearing,” but his art was practised on the King's coin, not his broadcloth. He was by birth a gentleman of Norfolk family, [see Wilts. Vis. 1565.] His third wife was Grace widow of Robert Pagett Alderman of London: whose daughter Ann was wife of Sir William's brother Henry. Sir William was one of the chief officers of the Mint, and by malpractices, carried to an enormous extent, obtained the means of speculating largely in the purchase of Abbey lands. In 1547 he bought estates in Wiltshire, at Avebury, Winterbourne, Charlton, and Barbury near Ogbourne: late belonging to Fotheringhay College, co. Northampton. Also Lacock Abbey, Beaulieu, Notton, Woodrew, Seend, Seend-row, Catcombe, Luddington, Cote, Medburn, and the Rectory of Lacock: with many others in Gloucestershire, Berks, and elsewhere. In 1548 his frauds were discovered. He was, says Strype, “clapt up” in the Tower, indicted before the Lord Mayor, and upon his own confession, convicted of having in the first year of King Edward VI. counterfeited in the Mint at Bristol £12,000 of coins resembling the testoons (a debased coin then recently prohibited): also of having defrauded the King of clippings and shearings of the coin to the amount of several thousand pounds, and of having falsified indentures and books. The whole amount of his profits he was unable to declare. He was attainted and his lands forfeited. Yet it seems he was not so ruined but was able soon after to make a great purchase again. For in the fourth year of the same King he was allowed to buy his estates back by paying nearly £13,000. Bishop Latimer in his sermon on covetousness, speaks of him as a sincere penitent. “Some examples there have been of open restitution, and glad may he be that God was so friendly unto him, to bring him unto it in this world. I am not afraid to name him; it was Master Sherrington, an honest gentleman, and one that God loveth. He openly confessed that he had deceived the King, and he made open restitution. Oh what an argument may he have against the devil, when he shall move him to desperation. God brought this out to his amendment. It is a token that he is a chosen man of God, and one of his elected.” Sir Thomas Seymour (the Protector's brother) was an instigator to the fraud, in order to raise money for his own political purposes. This story is told at length by Strype [Mem. ii. Pt. I. p. 191. 8vo.] and by Ruding, [Coinage, iii. 314, 4to.]

Sir William Sherington is said to have built at Lacock Abbey the Turret in which the Magna Charta of Henry III. is preserved. His monument is in the Parish Church. He had no children,

Mem. The story that Sir Robert Long told me of Sir (Henry) Sherington's daughter Olave, who leaped, at night, downe from the battlements of the Abbey Church, to (John) Talbot, her lover, who caught her in his arms, but she struck him dead, and was with great difficulty brought to life: her father told her, Since she made such leapes, she should e'en marry him.¹

and his brother Sir Henry, the friend of Bishop Jewell, succeeded. Henry's heirs were two daughters, Grace, wife of Sir Anthony Mildmay of Apthorp, co. Northampton (whose daughter married Francis Fane, first Earl of Westmoreland), and Olive, who married John Talbot Esq. of Salwarp co. Worcester, fourth in descent from John second Earl of Shrewsbury. After the death of John Talbot, Olive remarried Sir Robert Stapylton of Yorkshire, and resided at Lacock, in her second widowhood, as Lady Stapylton. The estates were divided between the two sisters Lady Mildmay and Mrs. Talbot. The next owners of Lacock were Sherington Talbot the father, who died 1630, and Sherington Talbot the son, who died 1677. The latter was succeeded by his son Sir John. In June 1685 a duel took place during Monmouth's rebellion in the West, between Sir John's eldest son by his first wife, Mr. Sherington Talbot, "a worthy gentleman" says Evelyn, "who had behaved very bravely," and Captain Love, Marshal General of the Artillery. The quarrel arose as to the comparative conduct of their respective men on the occasion of an alarm from Monmouth's men. The duel took place at the White Hart Inn, Glastonbury, and Sherington Talbot was mortally wounded.

¹ A portrait of Olive Sherington is preserved at Lacock Abbey, and her little finger, drawn slightly curved, is accepted by the easy visitor as the mark of personal damage sustained in this wonderful flying leap. Dr. Popham, formerly Vicar of Lacock, in a letter written 1802, declares the whole story to be fabulous. No one who considers the usual height of a Church battlement will be likely to believe it. Whether Miss Sherington did or did not leave her home in any irregular way, ought to have been known in Aubrey's time, for she was still living in 1651, when he was in his 25th year, and her grandson, Col. Sherington Talbot,—a person likely to be acquainted with the fact, if it had really happened—was his "honoured friend." It is however not improbable that village tradition may have transferred to one lady, the alleged exploit of another, viz., one of the Nuns of the Convent who is said, according to a second variety of the tale, to have escaped through a window. That a young lady was abducted, is certain. For in the MS. Cartulary of the Hungerford Family there is an Indenture dated April 19, 4. Hen. VI. [1426], from which it appears that one Godfrey Rokell had carried off, from Lacock Nunnery, Eleanor daughter of John Montfort, a Minor whose wardship belonged to Sir Walter (afterwards Lord) Hungerford, the High Treasurer. There was an old Statute, "De raptu Custodiæ," which provided that if any layman or other, should by force lead away or marry any heir under the age of 14 years, he should pay to the party to whom her wardship belonged the value of the Marriage, and be imprisoned until he had paid the same, and also until he had satisfied the Crown for the trespass. By the Indenture referred to, Sir Walter Hungerford

BOWDON.

Bowdon, I believe, hath been a celle to Lacock; it is of ancient and strong free-releases Godfrey Rokell and Elena, Abbess of Lacock, from all actions to which they had been liable in consequence of the abduction. In the list of the Abbesses of this House, printed in the Monasticon, there is none of the Christian name of Elena: but in the Registers of Sarum the name is found. "In 1408, William Stephens was presented to the Vicarage by Elena, Abbess of Lacock." Wilts. Inst. p. 96. The following is a copy of the Indenture in the Hungerford Cartulary.

"Hæc Indentura facta apud Farlegh decimo nono die mensis Aprilis anno quarto Regis Henrici sexti, inter WALTERUM HUNGERFORD militem Thesaurarium Angliæ ex unâ parte, et GALFRIDUM ROKELL ex alterâ parte, testatur, Quod prædictus Walterus remisit, relaxavit, et omnimodo pro se heredibus et executoribus suis in perpetuum quietclamavit ELENÆ, ABBATISSÆ DE LACOCK, et prædicto GALFRIDO, heredibus et executoribus eorundem, omnimodas actiones de Raptu Custodiæ ELIANORÆ Filie JOHANNIS MONTFORT, ac quascunque actiones personales quas versus eos seu eorum aliquem habuit, habebit, seu habere poterit ab origine mundi usque in diem confectionis præsentium. Ita quod ab omnibus actionibus personalibus ante hæc tempora perpetratis in perpetuum pro præsentibus sit exclusus. In cujus rei," &c.

¹ An engraving of this Brass, and an account of other Baynard monuments in the church by Mr. Edward Kite, are given in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. p. 1: See also Mr. Kite's "Wilts. Brasses."

To the South side of Lacock church an ancient house seems to have been attached, which now forms part of the church itself. The new cemetery of this parish was consecrated by Dr. J. H. Monk late Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, September 1st, 1854.

stone building; a little chamber chapell yet remaining with the crucifix in the window, March 6, 1625. Here hath been a parke, and till about 1660, the pales stood about it. It is the seate of my worthy and honoured friend, George Johnson, Esqr. Councillor at Lawe. He has trebled this estate; Marl lies about 15 foot deep under the barren sand. Hereabout is found store of Cinders, which is the remaynes of a Roman Bloomery; perhaps here might have been a vulcano, as in Surrey. Mem. The sand on the hills hereabout is very fitt for a glasse work, and Compton (Basset) stone for a furnace. Mem. The deep lane from Bowdon to Rey-bridge is very full of nitre, as a warm day will evidence; this hill abounds with excellent blue marle, and marle abounds with nitre.¹

¹ There is no account of any "Cell," or House subordinate to Lacock Abbey, at this place. If the "little chamber chapell" was attached to a mansion, it must have been taken down with the old house about 1770. The date "6 March 1625" cannot mean the day and year on which Aubrey made this observation: because he was not born till 12 March 1626. It was most likely a slip of his pen, for 1525.—The name of Bow-don may possibly be derived from the winding of the hill (dún in Anglo-Saxon.) A French topographer says, "L'arc que décrit un vallon ou une rivière on appelle le "Bout," en Saxon, Bow." "Where the hill forms a curve, in shape of a bow," ["Ove s'incurva il monte, A guisa d'arco,"] might be Ariosto's description of Bowdon Hill. Bowdon was part of the property of Lacock Nunnery, and after the Dissolution became Sir W. Sherington's. His niece Grace (one of the coheireses of his brother Sir Henry) had it for her share. She married (as already mentioned in the note p. 92) Sir Anthony Mildmay whose daughter Mary was wife of Francis Fane, Earl of Westmoreland. The Earl sold it about 1663. Aubrey in his "Nat. Hist. of Wilts," often mentions the luck of Mr. George Johnson in enriching his land with marl. Also that, "in 1666, the diggers found the bones of a man under a quarrie of planke stones. He told me he saw it. He was a serious person and fide dignus." Mr. Johnson was a North Wales Judge, Solicitor to the Treasury; and M.P. for Devizes 1681: he was dead before 1696. His grandson James, sometime a Master of Westminster School, and afterward Bishop of Worcester, died at Bath from the effects of a fall from his horse in Nov. 1774. In 1751 Sir Francis Haskins Eyles Stiles Bart. sold the estate to Ezekiel Dickinson Esq. whose son Barnard built the present house. It was purchased a few years ago by Capt. John Neilson Gladstone, R.N. (brother of the Right Honourable W. E. Gladstone, now Chancellor of the Exchequer) Sheriff of Wilts in 1859, and now M.P. for Devizes. This gentleman built at his sole expense the new Church of St. Ann on Bowdon Hill, besides giving £1000 towards its endowment, and £100 for a School. The Church was consecrated by Dr. Charles Baring, the present Diocesan, 28 July 1857. On the Common is an ancient building placed by the Nuns of Lacock to protect the spring of water by which the Abbey was supplied. There are others of similar kind at Monkton Farley, and Edington.

LAKEHAM.

Quære, by Mr. T. G. (Thos. Gore), of the old deedes here. Baynard married with the d. and heir of Blewett. Mem. There is a report that if the King should happen to kill a deer in the Forest, so near to the River Avon that one might throw a Horne, the Lord of Lakham, by custome, could challenge it for his own, which Sir Robert Baynard did in King James's time, and alleged his graunt for it from a King; q. his name. "O my soule," said King James, "he was a wise King that made such a graunt."¹

¹ Lackham did not belong to the Nuns of Lacock. It has passed through the following hands. Temp. Hen. III, William de Ewe, a Norman Baron. From Hen. III. to c. 1350, the family of Bluet, who were also of Silchester, Hants. About the same time (1303) Roger Bigod Earl of Norfolk and Alice (Basset?) his wife had some part of Lackham. And for some years an estate here was held for a term, probably jure uxoris, by John Peyton 1346; the same, by Peter de Cusaunce 1352. By marriage with the heiress of Bluet it came to the Baynards, who were owners from c. 1350 to 1635. By marriage of the heiress of Baynard it came to the Montagu family. Early in the present century it was bought by Capt. Rooke, R.N.: and after his decease, was purchased about three years ago, by the present owner H. B. Caldwell Esq.

Attached to the Manor was a Chapel dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary. In a Deed (no date) Edward Sweyn gave some land to Lacock Abbey, charged with maintenance of the Lamp of St. Mary. [New. Mon.] Sir John Bluet in 1308 granted certain rents to Robert of the Bridge, Clerk, for his life, subject to annual provision of 2 lbs of wax for the Chapel of St. Mary of Lackham. [Add. Chart. No. 1533.] In 1346 John de Peyton obtained a license. [Wyvill Reg.] Three chaplain's names are preserved: viz. 1349, Stephen Draper: 1352, Walter Fynamour: and 1410, William Hunte. [Wilts. Inst.] The site is not known. At the rear of Sir John Awdry's house at Notton are some fragments of carved stone-work which may have come from it. Notton belonged to the Nunnery. Afterwards it became part of the Lackham estate, and was severed about 90 years ago. Lands at Notton, and Bewley (Beaulieu) Court belonged in 1528 to Sir Edward Darell.

croft in Langelegh *Burel*¹ called "Penicroft,"² between the croft of John the Miller and that of Walter de la Yate. Witnessed by Sir John of Estingdone (Easton Piers) William of Heywood, Milo of Langley and others. [See Appendix No. ij, no date, but about A.D. 1240.]

It is likely that this is the figure of Johannes Burel. It is very old glasse worke.³

Mem. that in the old time there was a way of donation of Lands by a Horne. e.g. Ulphus, a ruler in Deira, being old and childless, came to the High Altar at St. Peter's, at Yorke, kneeled down and drank wine out of a Horne, and then layed it on the Altar, and thereby gave all his Lands to God, and St. Peter: the likeness of this Horne is in stone, in severall places of the side of the choire which he built. The Horn itself Thomas Lord Fairfax hath amongst his rarities. But the Horne here, appears to be a hunting Horne: perhaps he was a Raunger or Lieutenant of some Forest about these partes. Vide Ola. Wormii. Mon. Danica. where is mention of Hornes. Mem. Painting in glasse came into England but in King John's time, Mr. Dugdale saith. The Carta above was in Hen. III.

Mem. Vide iterum the shield: If the chief be Or., and what colour the 2 mullets be.

² "Penicroft" is still the name of a ground, near Peckingell Mead.

³ The strange figure (No. 152) is drawn exactly as Aubrey's rude sketch represents it: but the glass was most likely broken, or badly set, when he saw it, as the head-dress is unintelligible, and the horn is placed where the legs should be, instead of being under the feet. There can be no doubt that it was a Knight in mail-armour under the long surcoat of temp. Edw. I. and earlier. The horn was probably a badge of some forest tenure. One of the name of Burel married an heiress of Woodland co. Devon: and the arms borne by him very much resemble these, but have three leopard's faces instead of three mullets on the chief.

My brother Wm. sayes that in this chiefe are 3 mullets of 6 points, pierced, sans colour, and that there are 2 shields more which I did not see, like Powlet and Courtney. [Pl. ix. No. 150. 151.]

The Lordship of Edward of Salisbury under which (as mentioned in the first note to page 96) Langley was held by "Borel" at the Conquest, included the Honour of Trowbridge, which descended in course of time to the Dukes of Lancaster. [See note to Leland's Tour, Wilts. Mag. I. 152]. In the Inquisitions, Langley is twice mentioned [4. and 6. Hen. IV.] as held under the Honour of Trowbridge: consequently under the Duchy.

The Burel family disappear, (as stated p. 96) about 1300. In 1304 it belonged to Sir John Delamere, owner also of Leigh-Delamere: who with Alice his wife obtained in 1332 a license for an oratory in their manor "of Langley and Lye" [Sarum Reg.] His last Presentation to Langley Church was in 1342. That the manor was then transferred to Sir Reginald Cobham of Sterborough, would appear from the Will of his widow Joan Lady Cobham, (daughter of Thomas Lord Berkeley), dated Aug. 13. 1369. [Test. Vetust. p. 81]. "I will that my house in Southwark be sold to pay my Lord's debts: and to found prayers in the parish church of Langele-Borell for the souls of Sir John Delamere Knt., sometime lord there, Sir Reginald Cobham, Sir Thomas Berkeley, and for the souls of my benefactors. If Reginald my son shall appropriate that church for the maintenance of two priests to celebrate Divine Service there for ever, as it was intended and conditioned by the said Sir John Delamere when he sold that lordship of Langele, with that of Lye, to my husband, in the presence of the Lord Berkeley my father, then I will, &c." But the actual purchaser seems to have been the lady's father; for the Berkeley evidences, (Fosbrooke's Extracts p. 134 and 136), state that in 1343 Thomas Lord Berkeley purchased the Manor and Advowson of Langley Burrell of Sir John Delamere, and gave it the same year, with £2000 in money, to his daughter Joan on her marriage with Sir Reginald Cobham. In the Wilts Institutions Lord Berkeley is the Patron of the Living in that year. The Arms of Cobham are still on a wooden boss on the roof of the aisle, and the church is traditionally said to have been built by one of that family. But the original fabric is much older: the pillars that divide the North aisle from the Nave being low and circular with Norman capitals. The Cobhams probably enlarged it. Their names occur several times in the Presentations. In 1460 the Patron, in right of his wife Margaret Cobham, was Ralph Nevill, Earl of Westmoreland: (misprinted in the Wilts Institutions, Earl of Westminster.)

By marriage with Anne daughter and heir of Sir Thomas Cobham of Sterborough the manor passed to Edward de Burgh, second Baron Burgh of Gainsborough, co. Lincoln; who was Patron 1489. (His grandmother was a Percy, and her mother an heiress of Strabolgi. Coll. Top. et Gen: vi. 88. This explains the shield No. 153). In 8. Eliz. (1565) U. Burgh sold it to John Reed: [Chap. House Fines]; who in 20. Eliz. (1577) was "exonerated of Homage for the Manor held of the Earl of Sarum," (Jones's Index to Records.) In 1601 it had passed to Henry White, then owner also of Grittleton. About 1660 his grandson sold it to Samuel Ashe Esq. the ancestor of the present owner, the Rev. Robert Martyn Ashe.

Anno Domini 1652, was printed a booke for Ralph Smith, at the signe of the Bible in Cornhill near the Royal Exchange, called "The Wiltshire Rant," being "A Narrative of the most unparalleled Prophanes Actings, Counterfeit Repentings, and Evil Speakings of Thomas Webbe, late pretended Minister of Langley Buriall, intruder to Henry Norborne, B.D., by Edward Stokes, of Titherton Lucas, Esq." (It has 83 pages, and the mottoes are Isaiah lix. 4. 5. 6, containing two jeux de mot on the name Webbe; "They hatch cockatrice eggs, and weave the spider's Webb."—"Their Webbs shall not become garments. &c." Ed.)

There was such Blasphemy and uncleanness among the zealots of these parts, all which is sett forth in this book, by the author, a sober prudent person, that in after ages 'twill scarcely be believed: most of the parties I myself knew. The Bacchanalia of the Romans were not more licentious.²

² Mr. Edward Stokes the author of "The Wiltshire Rant," was a Justice of Peace: of a family sometime resident in Langley Burel, Kington St. Michael and Tytherton Lucas. A copy of it is in the British Museum Library, under "Stokes." The circumstances which led to this publication were these. "About the year 1649" (to use the writer's words) "one Thomas Webb came as an Angel of light into these parts, with a great forme of Godlinesse, in sheep's cloathing: whereby he gained with ease the affections of many, not only hypocrites, but sincere hearted christians who took him to be only as he seemed to be. As new things, so new or strange persons, affect much. parsonage there he preached and practised for some short space, but none could spy out his wickednesse. This young stripling, having formerly made himself a preacher, forsaking his lawful calling, becomes a Parish Priest or Parson; and being settled to his content and obtaining a glebe worth £70 a year, he cunningly, to increase his fame, refused the Tythes, protesting against them as an unjust Tax; by which means he obtained the good will of divers of the most ignorant Parishioners: and others looked upon him as a conscientious man, not knowing what he had been nor what he was."

The other chief actor in this history was Mrs. Mary White, wife of Mr. Henry White then owner of the manor of Langley. Between her and Thomas Webbe a criminal intimacy sprung up; which being promoted by the two families having agreed to live under one roof, (the manor house), scenes of the most disgraceful kind were enacted for some time. At length the matter being taken up by the neighbourhood, informations against the two chief persons were laid before two magistrates, Mr. Edward Stokes and Mr. William Shute, by whom they were committed to Salisbury Jail. Adultery was made a capital offence by the Long Parliament: a severity of law which defeated its own object. So the Jury, being "for life or death," acquitted them. Upon their release Webbe proceeded to London to appear before the Committee for Plundered Ministers, in consequence of certain Articles laid against him by Mr. Stokes. To the series of scandalous crimes and misdemeanours with which he was charged, Webb was required by order of the Committee to give answer before the County Justices at Chippenham, Mr. George Ivy, Sir Edward Baynton, Mr. Shute and others. Upon these articles and depositions he was ejected from the Parsonage of Langley in September 1651. He then published a Manifesto called "A masse of malice against Thomas Webb (late Minister of Langley Burell) discovered." It was in reply to that effusion, and in vindication of himself and his brother magistrates, that Mr. Edward Stokes wrote the pamphlet called "The Wiltshire Rant:" such a picture of blasphemy, immorality and cant as had, it is to be hoped, no parallel, even in those times of spiritual extravagance.

¹ A by-lane now leading only to fields. This name for a road was not uncommon. It is supposed to be that of some mythological personage, in Anglo Saxon Heathendom. It was also their name for The Milky Way in the Heavens.

and Essex. In Wilts their name survives also at Fisherton Delamere. They were landowners at Steeple Lavington, Foxley, Winterbourne Gunnore (so called from a Lady, Gunnora Delamere,) Langley Burrell, and other places. At Nunney, co. Somerset, are some monuments with effigies: and the ruins of their Castle. Sir Peter Delamere is the first of the Speakers of the Commons whose names have been preserved.

This Manor, in Hen. III., was held by them of William de St. Leger. In 1343 they sold it, (see above, "Langley Burrell," p. 97, note 1.) to Thomas Lord Berkeley who settled it on the marriage of his daughter Joan with Sir Reginald Cobham. Among succeeding owners three names are supplied by the Sarum Institutions: viz. in 1424, Robert Blamford: in 1465, Thomas Norreys, and in 1521, Wm. Thornborough. It belonged in 1634 to the family of Chivers of Quemerford near Calne: in 1730 to that of Vince, and was purchased, from the two sons of Col. Henry Chivers Vince by the late Joseph Neeld Esq. of Grittleton.

² In the margin of his MS., by a little drawing with his pen, Aubrey has corrected himself. There were only nine compartments: the largest in the centre: three smaller ones on each side: and again a larger one at each extremity. The church, with which Aubrey ought to have been familiar enough, as he was born within a mile of it, and was taught his first lessons, partly at the then Rectory, and partly (as he elsewhere says) "in the chancel," was entirely taken down in 1846: but the chancel, with its Arch, Reredos, and curious Bell Turret, were re-erected at Sevington as the village school. The old Bell Turret is well known to English Archæologists. It is described in Archæol. Journal, I. 37, but with a poor Plate. Also in the "Builder," VI. No. 287, and II. 606, where the woodcut of the octagonal spire is incorrect. There are no ribs running up between the several faces. The best drawing of it is by Wm. Twopeny Esq. in a recent volume of plates of "Ancient Timber work." The New church was built upon the old site, and the model of the Bell Turret imitated, with one or two additions. In stating that the cost of the New church was borne solely by the late Mr. Neeld, the writer of these Notes on Wilts. Topography, takes this opportunity of adding, that to the same Gentleman's friendship he is indebted for the opportunity of writing them at the Rectory of Leigh-Delamere. Mr. Neeld died March 24, 1856, and was buried in a family vault under the North Aisle.

¹ The old church, (St. Margaret's) was of about A.D. 1190, Early English with some Norman features. The chancel had been altered into Perpendicular: at which time the Early triplet East window was blocked up in order that the stone reredos might be placed there. The name of Ridley has never been met with in any ancient notices of the parish. It seems most probable that the original church had been built by the Delameres. The shield Gules a chevron Or, if it had, as it may have had, charges on the chevron, would be that of Cobham. With a slight difference of colour it is that of Dudley: and being under a crucifix, perhaps denoted an ecclesiastic. It happens that Richard Dudley, sometime Master of the College de Valle Scholarum at Salisbury, and Precentor of the Cathedral, gave in 1537, to Oriel College Oxford, lands in this parish to support a Fellowship, or Exhibitions. It is not impossible that he may have embellished the church, and that Mr. Philip Kingsman the Rector, mistook the name of Dudley, for Ridley. "P. K." the initials of this Rector, were found on the old Parsonage house taken down in the first year of the present writer's incumbency, 1846, and have been duly preserved over the door of the new one. "P. K." died 1691, and his gravestone is built into the New church wall.

² Mr. Latimer's gravestone is now inserted at the East end of the New church outside. For some account of him, and of Aubrey as his scholar, see note in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. 99. 100.

LITTLETON DREW.

(Church.)

Anciently the Parish Church was a mile and a halfe from hence in the place called Dunley Chapell, and for convenience the Lord of the Mannour and parishioners agreed to build the Church here. The inhabitants say that the South part of the Church was built by Drew about 200 years since, more or less. The North side was built by the Parish. In the South side of the Church here, is a monument, in the wall, of a woman Drew. The South windowe of about H. 4. From the Drews this Mannour came to Mompesson and Welles by two coheires; so they divided, and Wells had it, and about 165..., sold it to the Lord Herbert, of Chepstowe, eldest sone of the E. of Worcester.²

"STANDE LOOKE DOWNE: and behold the stone under which was laide the Body of ELIZABETH Eldst daughter of SECOLE CHIVER ESQUIER Lord of this Mannour. The Miracle of her AGE for REASON, LANGUAGE, and RELIGEON, Who deceased August 10th, 1653, MENSE ÆTATIS SUÆ 33°" i.e. two years and nine months old. This young prodigy was half-sister to Mary the wife of the Right Hon. John Methuen, Chancellor of Ireland. Others of the Chivers, and some of the Vince family, are buried in a vault under the South Aisle.

² The popular derivation of "Littleton Drew," from "the Druids," seems to be altogether a mistake. The same derivation has been given to the names of Drew's Teignton in Devonshire, and Stanton Drew in Somerset. It is certainly remarkable that at both those places there are some of the antiquities called Druidical; at the one, a cromlech, and at the other, stone circles: and also that, near, but not within, the parish of Littleton, there is a cromlech. This stands in the parish of Nettleton, to which accordingly the distinctive name of Drew ought to have been given, if it had been really derived from Druidical origin. But notwithstanding the curious fact that such antiquities do exist at or near these three places, Druid is not the proper derivation. It cannot be shown that the Druids ever gave their title to any parish in England. The Index Villaris contains not a single instance. The only places, the second or distinctive name of which bears any approximation to the word Druid, are the three above mentioned. Yet it is quite certain that at the very period when the fashion most prevailed of naming places from their owners, all these three severally belonged to a family of the name of Drew. So far as regards Drew's Teignton, the question is settled in "Archæol. Journal," V. 321; and in "Topographer and Genealogist," II. 209: as to Stanton Drew, in "Collinson's Somerset," II. 432. DUNLEY.

(A Deed undated, but c. Hen. III.) Quitclaim by the commoners of the Pasture called Donelweye: (to the Abbot of Glaston, then owner of Nettleton, Grittleton, &c. Ed.)

[“Walter Dru, Lord of Liteltone, and others, release to John, Lord Abbot of Glastonbury, their right to common of pasture westward of Donewolweye in the Abbot’s manor of Netelingtone. Also in the marsh between Donewolweye and a cart-way. Witnessed by Sir Godfrey de Wrokeshale, Roger de Lokington, Henry de Cerne, Reginald Burel, Knights, and others.” See Appendix, No. III.]

Mem. I do believe Donewolweye to be that which is now called Dunley, where till about 1640 remained the walls of a chapell, in the north-west quarter as you stand in the point where the Fosse-way is crossed by the way that leads from Clapcote to Aldrington.

Q. Mr. T. G(ore): If Kingswood men came to Dunley to offer?¹

oldest records this parish is always called simply Littleton. It never bore the name of Drew until it belonged to the family of that name, one of whom, Walter Drew, is called “Lord of Littleton” in a Deed relating to Dunley given above by Aubrey, which from the names of the witnesses is about A.D. 1290. See also “Testa de Nev.” p. 142 and 158.

Thomas, Earl of Stafford, held the Court Leet of Littleton in 1302. The Mompessons were also of Seagry, (which see.) Sir William Courtenay was the actual vendor to Lord Herbert. From that nobleman (afterwards second Marquis of Worcester) the manor has descended to the Duke of Beaufort. Littleton Field, then an open common lying between the village and Dunley, was enclosed about 1841. Sir John Neeld is a proprietor in the eastern part of the parish. The church was restored, through the exertions of the Rev. Gray Lawson the present Rector, and re-opened on 6th May, 1856. A village School was built in 1850 by subscription among the friends of the Rev. Anthony Austin late Rector: and the Parsonage house was rebuilt by Mr. Lawson in 1852. In taking down the church, part of the remains of a stone Cross was found. The Advowson used to be in the patronage of the Bishop of Sarum, but in 1852 it was transferred by an Order in Council to that of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

In the Church is nothing of antiquity; marble, or rather liasse pillars, to old windowes like those of Kington St. Michael, and Sarum Cathedrall, whence it is to be judged that it was built about that time, i.e. a little after the finishing of Sarum Cathedrall Church.²

In this village is a fine spring called Hancock's-well, which is mentioned by Dr.

The site of Dunley Chapel may still be traced in the corner field exactly opposite Sir John Neeld's "Foss Lodge," at the Cross Roads known as the "Elm and Ash:" so called from a tradition that a felon was buried there and that two young trees on or near his grave grew up so closely together as to seem one. Whether this small chapel ever was, as Aubrey says, the Parish Church, is very doubtful. It was more probably a way-side chapel for the benefit of the crowds of pilgrims travelling to the Monastery of Hailes in Gloucestershire, by whom the Foss road (on which Dunley Chapel stood), used to be traversed. (See Bishop Latimer's account, supra p. 87, note 2). At another place where four roads meet, also on the Foss, near Long Newton, there appears to have been some building of similar kind. In modern times such sites are generally seized upon for public houses. By "the Kingswood men" Aubrey means probably the tenants of Alderton Grange which belonged to Kingswood Abbey. He fancied that being near, these may have belonged, as parishioners, to Dunley instead of Alderton.

¹ The Manor and Advowson of Luckington belonged in 34 Edw. III. (1360) to Sir Thomas Bradston of co. Glouc., under the Honour of Trowbridge. Of Sir Thomas, (an extinct Peer, not mentioned by Bolton,) there is a particular account in the Berkeley MSS. [See Smith's Extracts, p. 136.] His daughter Elizabeth was wife of Sir Walter de la Pole, and died owner 1428. Their daughter Margaret de la Pole was wife of Thomas Ingoldsthorp, and their son Edmund was the heir to the estate in that year. [See Napier's Swynecombe, p. 295.] In 1442 Thomas Burton Esq was owner in right of Agnes Chamberlayne his wife. In 1531 the patronage belonged to the Comptons, ancestors of Lord Northampton. From about 1600 to the early part of the present century the principal owners were the Fitzherberts, from the last female of which family it passed by will to that of the present possessor Mr. Jones. In 1315 the Querle family had some lands here: and in 1400 St. Maur had one third of an estate. The ancient name was Lokyngton.

² The church of St. Michael contains some fine portions of Early English style, and is quite capable of being restored to a very beautiful edifice, but it is now in a most unbecoming condition. Elegant Purbeck marble shafts are choked with vulgar stone panelling, and a small side chapel has been converted into a "manor pew," patched up with the relics of a carved stone reredos and a wooden screen. Many of the church windows are blocked up. There is a stone pulpit, and, at the chancel door, a curious porch.

Childrey in his "Britannia Baconica."¹ Being precipitated by a lixivium of pot-ashes, it yields a sediment of nitre, turning a little to yellow, i.e. a kind of fine flower of such a colour. The vertues of it testified by Mr. Fitzherbert, Lord of the Mannour, Mr....., Minister there, and other inhabitants: It cures the Itch and Scabbe; it hath done much good to the eies. I tried this water also by evaporation of two quarts, and it yielded as above.

Mem. I find store of deep blew marle hereabout, which sort much abounds with nitre. In it is often a vitriolate wood, black and burning like coal.

SHERSTON MAGNA.

It lies on the North limitts of this Shire, from whence it hath its denomination: perhaps anciently a mere, or Shire stone, might be set up. Saxon, Seire, signifies division: from whence a pair of shears.

Here are sometimes found Roman Coines; about 1650 was a prettie quantity found in the field, by ploughing. I have one silver piece of Constantine the Great, on his head a kind of chaplet of roses, not laurell: his hair is a kind of flaggish hair. On the reverse, "Constantinus Aug." In the Limbe within, an Angell or Genius holding a palm branch; in the left hand, stretched out, something like a snake involved; underneath the Genius, T. S. C.

As I remember, in the fields, here is a barrowe or more.

¹ Joshua Childrey D.D. Archdeacon of Salisbury, 1663. The book alluded to was entitled "Britannia Baconica, or the natural rarities of England, Scotland, and Wales, historically related, according to the precepts of Lord Bacon," &c. London, 1661, 8vo., the work which first suggested to Dr. Plot his "Natural History of Oxfordshire." Hancock's well is still resorted to for the cure of sick dogs, bad legs, and the like.

In the wall of the Church Porch on the outside, in a nich without inscription or scutcheon, is a little figure about 2 foote and a half high, ill done, which they call Rattle Bone, who, the tradition is, did much service against the Danes, when they infested this part of the countrey; the figure resembles more a priest than a soldier; something looks like a Maniple, and his Robe is a kind of Cope. [Pl. x. No. 169.]

Mem. The old woemen and children have these verses by tradition, viz.

“ Fight well Rattlebone,
 “ Thou shalt have Sherstone.”
 “ What shall I with Sherston doe,
 “ Without I have all belongs thereto?”
 “ Thou shalt have Wyck & Willesly,
 “ Easton towne and Pinkeney.”

These are hamlets belonging to this parish. Their tradition is that the fight was in the ground called the Gaston. Quære, what it signifies? At Malmesbury, here, at Ashwick, and at Marsfield, are grounds of this name, but at about all these places have been fights: most of them are arable land.¹

On the north side of the Towne is a signe where a castle stood, which they call Castle Here hath been heretofore a Market, which was kept on Fryday: the towne was burnt temp. II. 8. since which time it hath been disused: 'tis strange it is not revived, for it stands very advantageously. The Charter is in the Church Chest.

In the West windowe of the North Aisle:

[Pl. ix. No. 166] BEAUCHAMP. [No. 167] SPENSER. [No 168] Quarterly BEAUCHAMP and NEWBURGH. Within it should have been inserted an Iscutcheon of Spencer as juxta.

Mem. Spenser had to doe at Sherston 300 or 400 years since.¹

It belonged to the Priorie of Kington St. Marie's juxta Kington St. Michael, given by V. Legier Booke.²

¹ The Manor of Great, or as it was sometimes called "Much-Sherston" was granted by Hen. III. to Matthew Besil. In Edw. I. John Besil was holding it for his life. In 1316 the same king settled it on his daughter the Princess Mary a Nun of Ambresbury, as part of her maintenance. In 1334 Edward son of Humphrey Bohun Earl of Hereford was a land-owner here. In 1349 the Manor, and Advowson of the Rectory, belonged to Hugh le Despenser and Elizabeth his wife, widow of Lord Badlesmere. In 1375 to his nephew Edward Lord Despenser who married the heiress of Burghersh; and afterwards to his son Thomas, Earl of Gloucester. According to an Inq. a. q. d. [Jones's Index] this Earl in 1400 gave the Manor, with Broadtown and Winterslow to Thomas de Percy, Earl of Worcester, who was beheaded 1402. Earl Thomas Despenser's daughter and heiress Isabella married Richard Beauchamp Earl of Worcester, (No. 168) and after her first husband's death she married, by dispensation, his nephew Richard Beauchamp Earl of Warwick. By the second marriage she had a son Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, to whom the Manor and Adowson belonged in 1445. The Beauchamp and Despenser estates ultimately passed by an heiress to Richard Nevil Earl of Warwick, the "King-maker," to whom Cox [Mag. Brit.] says that Sherston belonged at his death in 1471. The Tropenell family of Chalfield were owners here, and their Pedigree mentions Thomas Ivy as Lord of Sherston in 1483, [Hist. of Chalfield, 7]. In 1585—8 Sir Edward Seymour Lord Beauchamp and Earl of Hertford was Lord of the Manor. A volume of Court Rolls of that period is amongst the Rawlinson MSS. in the Bodl. Library B. 440; Thomas Estcourt Esq., Simon Cothrington Gent., Thomas Gore, Francklyn, Webb, and others were then Freeholders.

If this is the "Sorstain" of Domesday Book, the Rectory at the conquest was attached to the Foreign Priory of St. Wandragesil in Normandy. But for some time after A.D. 1299 the Rector was nominated by the Crown: the Vicar by the Rector. In 1340 it belonged to the Despensers, afterwards to the Beauchamps. The Rectorial Tithes of Sherston and Aldrington with the appointment of Vicar were then given by Henry Beauchamp, Duke of Warwick, to the Abbot and Convent of Tewkesbury. (The Abbot already possessed, in 1389, the rents of "Le Gore juxta Sherston.) At the Dissolution, the Rectory was transferred to the Dean and Chapter of Gloucester: whose lessee generally nominated the Vicar of Sherston, and also allowed, by the terms of his lease, £20 a year for a Curate to Aldrington Chapel. Some lands at "Sceorstan," Wilts, were given by Editha, a Saxon Queen, relict of King Edward, to the support of the Canons of

The windowes here are lamentably spoiled. In a windowe of the South side is left, in the limbe, thus: Orate pro aia dni Roberti—I suppose, Pinkeney—uxoris ei...

SHERSTON PINKENEY.

Now in the parish of Sherston, but I think heretofore, in H. 7, a small Mannor and parish. It belonged to the Priory of Kington St. Marie's¹ juxta Kington St.

St. Mary's Church in Old Sarum. A pension of £6 13s. 4d. was paid out of Sherston Rectory to the Cathedral of New Sarum, by the Abbot and Convent of Tewkesbury.

The church (Holy Cross) has Norman nave arches with good chevron mouldings. In the chancel a three-light East window with shafts of Purbeck marble, and ornamented canopy. The Tower is only about 150 years old, but rests on Early English arches, at the spring of which is a curiously short shaft resting on a corbel head. There was once a spire. In the North aisle is an arched monument to a Lady, c. 1350: and a three-light Early window. In the North chancel wall a "low side window" blocked up. The South chancel was added, c. 1460, and has square headed windows. The Porch is handsomely groined, with bosses: over it a small chamber. A fine yew tree and large lich-gate in the church yard: and in the Vicarage garden good remains of a Perpendicular cross.

¹ The Priory of St. Mary's, Kington, had nothing in the parish, except one messuage in Little Sherston, paying an assize rent of 13s. 4d. a year. In Little Sherston, temp. Hen. III., Sir John Grey (of Easton Grey) held some lands by the petty serjeanty of being falconer to the King. In the same reign, Ralph de Pinckeney, (whose name it retains,) held a Fee under the Barony of Castle Combe. From 1279 to c. 1560 it belonged to the Giffards of Weston under Edge, co. Gloucester, and afterwards of co. Hants. The Esturmy family were patrons about 1407, after a suit. The Manor was afterwards the property of the Estcourt family, by one of whom SLAUGHTENFORD. (Now Slaughterford).

That in this Parish was a great fight of old time, is the constant tradition of the Inhabitants, and that a Danish King, or General of the Danes, was killed. The farmer's sonne, of Hall-farme, in the green, where now the quarres be, looking back towards Slaughtenfords, was shot through, or over, the walle of the Parke.¹

Here is a prettie small Church, the most miserably handled that ever I saw, the very barres are taken out of the windowes; here have been two good South windowes, and the doores are gone and the paving, and it serves for any use, viz. weavers. The font gone to make a trough.

the Mansion House was built. Over the porch is the shield of ESTCOURT impaling CORBET. By marriage with Elizabeth, youngest sister and coheiress, ultimately sole heiress, of Thomas Estcourt Esq., (who died 1704,) the estate passed to Richard Cresswell Esq. of Sidbury co. Salop, to whose descendant W. H. Cresswell Esq. it now belongs. Lands at Sherston Pinkney, belonging to Malmesbury Abbey, are described by name, in Cott. MSS. Faust. B. VIII. p. 256.

Sherston Pinkeney had formerly a Free Chapel of it's own dedicated to St. John Baptist. The building has been long destroyed: and the site seems to have been forgotten. In Philip and Mary this chapel and certain rents belonging to the chapel-wardens were granted by the Crown to Hedges (Q. Hodges.) The name of several incumbents, entitled Rectors, are preserved in the Sarum Registry. All the presentations were made by the successive Lords of the Manor, except that of the last Incumbent, Elizeus Roberts, who was nominated by the Crown in 1640. The tithes of Pinkeney go to the Poor of Cirencester.

¹ Slaughterford is a very small hamlet lying at an angle of the valley between Castle Combe and Box: and about one mile from the Chippenham and Marshfield road. It is commanded by Ford hill on the west, on the brow of which are some ancient earthworks: and at no great distance are the very strong positions of Bury Camp, and the old Castle of Combe. It is also about mid-way between Bury Camp and the Yatton-down, which is claimed by some topographers as Ethandun, the scene of Alfred's victory over the Danes. [See Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 80. IV. 75 and 228.]

One of the Bayliffes of Weaving-Mill was buried in the Church-yard, before the Porch dore, under an Altar Monument, which is torne to pieces. There remains this escutcheon: [No. 171 BAYLIFFE]. The Inscription may be yet found, but I had no time to write it.²

SOPWORTH.

In the Church here is nothing of antiquity.

¹ The Manor and Rectorial Tithe of Slaughterford were granted by King Stephen to the foreign Nunnery of Martigny, and were afterwards transferred, in exchange, to Monkton Farley Priory. The Monks had a Court House here and a mill. Farley being an Alien Priory its estates were liable to confiscation [Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. 275,] and during some interval of this kind Slaughterford was held for the Prior and Convent by John Marreys, John Gore and Sir Thomas Hungerford, in 1391 (15 Rich. II). Hence perhaps the crest of Gore over the South door of the church mentioned by Aubrey. There may have been alteration in the building at that time, but a church there had been long before. For in 29 Edw. I. (1300) it was found upon enquiry by a Jury "that the Church of Slaughterford was not a mother Church nor several by itself, but was a chapel annexed to the Church of Chippenham, which church, with its chapels annexed, was given by Maud the Empress to Monkton Farley Priory." [Abb. Plac. 243.] The parish of Slaughterford was never connected with that of Chippenham: but the Prior being Rector and patron of both churches may at one time have treated Slaughterford as a chapelry to the larger church. Afterwards it was annexed to the adjoining church of Biddeston, of which the Prior was also Rector and patron: and so it has continued to the present time. Slaughterford is not mentioned in Sarum Registers till 1719, when Mr. Mountjoy (then of Biddeston) presented to it and the two Biddestons together. They are now in the gift of Winchester College. After remaining in ruins from Aubrey's time the body of Slaughterford Church was rebuilt, and reopened in 1823.

At the Dissolution, the Estate and Manor were granted to Sir Edward Seymour (afterwards the "Protector,") from whom they descended to Wyndham Earl of Egremont. About 1840—8, they were purchased by the late Joseph Neeld Esq. of Grittleton. [See Wilts Archæol. Mag. III. 36, "Allington."]

George Fox the Quaker often tarried here. There is another place of the same name between Naseby and Harborough co. Northampton, where King Charles's troops were cut to pieces after the battle of Naseby.

² William Bayliffe was principal tenant here in 1640: and another resident was Dominicus Matravers, the very old man mentioned above, p. 77.

"Here lies the body of John Shipway, Gent. Lord of the Mannour of Sopworth, who departed this life the 29th of September 1652."

"Here lies the body of Alice Gore, wife of Thomas Gore, Gent. Lord of Sopworth, who whiles she was living desired that she might bee upon her knees praying to God, dying, which being graunted, she soe departed this life the 9th day of February, 1663."¹

STANLEY ABBEY. (Near Chippenham.)

Qu. Who was the Founder of Stanleigh Abbey? I have been told it was Mawd the Empress, and that one Anstey, or Ansted, was the last Abbot here, and one of that name had lately £60. per annum out of it from Sir Edward Baynton, whose land it now is. It is very rich land, and lies by the river's side, but in a place in the winter time altogether unpleasant. Here is now scarce left any vestigium of Church or house.¹

The Tropenells of Chalfield also had in very ancient times an estate at Sopworth with the Patronage of the Church. According to a somewhat confused account published in "Walker's History of Chalfield," from an old MS. of that family, Sir Osbert Tropenell divided his estate between two sons Sir James and Walter. Sir James's two daughters Margaret and Lucy subdivided his share, and Margaret who married Hugh Paruns, by deed A.D. 1260, gave her portion at Sopworth to Monkton Farley Priory. Lucy married Leonard Mautravers (?) and their son John "who had the keeping of King Edward to his death," also gave part of his lands to the same Religious House. Walter Tropenell, brother of Sir James gave his portion to his daughter Galiena, and she in 1206 [Wilts. Fines] had exchanged them for lands at Uffcot with Elias de Turri, probably a Prior of Monkton Farley, as the Tropenell History says that Galiena's share also went to the Priory. The Prior had a Court-house, and 180 acres, with the Advowson to which he presented continually to the Dissolution; when all the estates of that monastery were granted to Sir Edward Seymour.

In 1558 William Lord Wyndesore of Bradenham co. Bucks. who married the heiress of William Sambourne of Berks bequeathed by will his Manor of Sopworth to his sixth son Walter Windsore who married the daughter of Sir Geoffrey Poole. In 1652 John Shipway was Lord of the Manor (according to Aubrey's inscription) and in 1663 Thomas Gore. He built the house now used as the Rectory. His family were a branch of the Gores of Alderton; descended from Thomas younger son of Thomas Gore Esq. (who died 1532) and Elizabeth Keynell. The estate and Advowson were purchased by the Duke of Beaufort's family. The church is dedicated to St. Mary: and the Registers begin 1697.

Mem. Lechmore, of the Middle Temple,² has taken notes out of an old Deed, of a Farme, or Estate that the Abbot of this Convent had assigned for his Concubine, for her life, and to his children by her. M. Pury, of Gloucester, has the very original Deed, quod videt.

Lokes-well, in the Forest of Chippenham, had been given by Henry Duke of Normandy (afterwards Henry II.), and his mother Maud the Empress, to one Drogo her Chamberlain. It was afterwards transferred to a House of Cistercians at Quarrer (now Quarr Abbey, Isle of Wight) founded A.D. 1132 by Baldwin de Redvers, Earl of Devon, on condition that the Monks should settle a House of the same Order at Lokeswell. This they did in 1151, by the name of Drown-Font (Drogonis Fons), in allusion to the copious spring of fine water for which the spot is celebrated. Three years afterwards the Brethren were removed to Stanley on receiving a fresh grant of lands within the King's Manor of Chippenham. The water of Lokes-well was made to follow them by an underground channel. Stanley Abbey Church was consecrated A.D. 1270. In order to distinguish it from other places of the same name, it was sometimes called "Stanley Imperatricis." There is no list of Abbots in the Monasticon; but a few names have been met with in various authorities. Ralph: deposed 1204: of whom Mr. Bowles (p. 116—119) states that he was deposed, "for attending a Convention" in Ireland without leave: ("eo quod duxerit Conventum," &c.) But that is not the meaning of the Latin words. His offence was that he had carried over to, and founded in, Ireland, a Branch establishment of Monks, without having first obtained the usual licence from the Chapter. Other Abbots were, Thomas of Colestune 1205: Nicholas Mendom: William Chinnok, tenth Abbot, who died 1268. William, 1357. That a member of the Anstie family was the last Abbot of Stanley, seems to be only one of John Aubrey's "hear-says." The last Abbot was probably Thomas Morley, who, November 4th, 1537, was consecrated in the chapel of Lambeth to be Suffragan Bishop of Marlborough; [Strype, Life of Cranmer, p. 88;] and in 1540 was presented to the Vicarage of Bradford on Avon. The site of the Abbey, and some lands, were then purchased by the Bayntons of Bromham. An engraving of the Conventual Seal is given in "Bowles's History of Bremhill," p. 83. The original Cartulary is in Trinity College, Dublin. For a notice of the breaking into the Abbey and carrying off the coffers of the Despensers, see "*Wilts. Archæol. ¹ "Old Mr. Ansted" must have been the "John Anstie of Egham" mentioned in the Pedigree. His father William married the daughter of Andrew Baynton buried in the South chapel of Chippenham church, [see above, p. 69.] William Anstie seems to have resided at the Abbey soon after the Dissolution. The quarterings in the shield No. 172 are those used by the Bayntons. In the Pedigree of that family printed in Sir R. C. Hoare's "Downton," p. 7, Anstie is miscalled Annesley; and Dandeleley, Dudley.

² Surrenden, often called Surrendell, is a solitary House and Farm between Alderton and Hullavington. The greater part of Hullavington parish is in Malmsbury Hundred, but Surrenden is in the Hundred of Chippenham. In Hen. III. it was held under the Mortimer's Fee by William de Middlehope, and Sir John de Easton. In 1565 by John Hamlyn who built a house in 1580. A person of this name was one of the Commissioners for valuing the estates of Lacock Abbey at the Dissolution in 1535. William Hamlyn sold Surrenden to the Gores of Alderton, who in 1583 held it of the Queen as of her Manor of Dunley. From the Gores it passed (together with the Alderton estate, see supra p. 51,) by descent to the Hedges and then to the Montagu family; from whom it was purchased about 50 years ago by the father of the late Rev. W. W. Burne, Rector of Grittleton. In 1858 the Rector bequeathed it to his nephew and successor the Rev. T. B. Lancaster. Part of the mansion house remains: but of the chapel mentioned by Aubrey there is no trace. In Kent the name of Surrenden is a known corruption of the Anglo-Saxon Swithræding-dene. The late Anglo-Saxon scholar Mr. Kemble explains the termination den, as

The Church or Chapel remains yet, but decayed. It is now in the parish of Hullavington, and in the possession of Thomas Gore, Esq. in whose ancestor's hands it hath been for at least a century of yeares. Q. of him when and how it came to them.

cubile ferarum, a haunt of wild animals, but chiefly swine. He suggests that the many dens in England, if successively traced on the map would indicate the lines of uncleared forest which surrounded the earliest marks. or family settlements. The mark-men had common rights in the dens. Bra-den (broad-den) was one of them. In a field east of Surrenden house is a large solitary stone half buried in the ground, apparently the remains of a cromlech.

The next owner was Robert Russell, a merchant of Bristol; perhaps the person of that name who was buried in Bremhill Church: [p. 61.] Then follows as patron, and probably owner, John Bagot. About A.D. 1500, the Manor and Advowson were purchased by Sir Thomas Long of Draycote and Wraxhall. By will, 1508, he bequeathed the Manor to his younger son William and his heirs; and two other younger sons successively; remainder to his eldest son. In 1519 it had returned to the eldest son Sir Henry Long, who held it, under the Barony of Castle Combe. He presented to the living in 1526. After the severance of the Wraxhall and Draycote estates in 1610, Keylways appears to have gone with the former, for in 1650, after it had been sequestered by the Parliament on account of Thomas and Robert Long having been delinquents in arms, and had been granted to Vincent Smith, John Long Esq. of Wraxhall, petitioned to have it restored as his inheritance. It hath been a good while in the possession of Stokes and Barrett, in partition. Arms of Stokes & Barrett [Pl. x. No. 175. 176.]

belonged to Walter Long of Bristol (uncle to Hope Long of Wraxhall) and Barbara his wife. In 1844 they were sold by Walter Long Esq. of Rood Ashton to the late Rev. Robert Ashe of Langley Burrell, and in the following year to the late Joseph Neeld Esq. of Grittleton.

Kellaways House and Farm (122 acres,) of which about 54 are in Bremhill parish, belonged in 1737 to Sir John Eyles of South Broom House. In 1740 it was sold to Mr. Paggen Hale. In 1797 William Hale of Locksley's, Herts, son and heir of William Hale formerly of King's Walden, Herts, (owner also of Easton Piers) sold it to Mr. Thomas Crook of Headington near Calne. In 1834 it was again sold, to the present owner William Stancombe Esq.

The name adhering to this parish from an ancient family has obtained an established place in the nomenclature of Geology. A peculiar oolitic limestone is quarried here called the "Kelloway's Rock," containing characteristic fossils of which a list (now requiring some alteration) is given in "Conybeare and Phillips," p. 194: also in "Phillips's Geology of Yorkshire." The deceptive appearance of a bituminous shale in the Oxford clay above this rock has led to sundry useless trials for coal in the neighbourhood of Titherington.

The original church (St. Giles) is called in the Diocesan Register, the chantry chapel of Keylways, until 1450. It is not unlikely that the family of that name built and endowed it, and that it afterwards became a parish church. It was destroyed before 1760: and has since been rebuilt in a different situation, but in very poor style.

The Rev. Henry Brindley, Rector 1785—1819, left a guinea a year for a Sermon to be preached against cruelty to animals. The Glebe of this Rectory lies at Melksham.

¹ This is perhaps the Titherington at which Two Hides of land were held at the Norman Survey by "Borel," who also held the neighbouring Manor of Langley (see p. 96). But the second name is derived from a family of Lucas who were owners of one Knights' fee in 1202, held under the Barons Tregoz of Ewyas Castle, Herefordshire: afterwards under Edward Nevil Earl of Bergavenny. In 1316 the owners were William Percehay, John Turpyn (whose demesne had formerly been Malory's) and Walter Scudamore, whose family were purchasers in Wilts from the Barons Ewyas, at Upton Scudamore. [Hoare's Westbury.] In 1352 Sir John Delamere (then of Langley and Leigh) had lands here. Bradenstoke Abbey had some portion of one of the Titheringtons, which was granted at the Dissolution to Mr. H. Goldney.

There is a pedigree of the Barretts in the "Wiltshire Visit." 1565 and 1623. William Barrett, the Historian of Bristol, born 1735, belonged to a family of or near Chippenham. On a garden wall at the old Manor house the shield of Barrett is still to be seen: and on a tablet in the church, "Hugh Barrett. 1627. æt. 85." Over the house door is a handsome stone shield, date 1702, ANDREWS, On a bend raguly cotised three mullets, impaling TOWNSEND, A chevron ermine between three escallop shells.

Of the Stokes family there are inscriptions in the church. For Edward Stokes, author of the "Wiltshire Rant," see "Langley Burell suprà p. 99. In later times the owners have been the Crookes, and H. G. G. Ludlow Esq. of Heywood.

The church (St. Nicholas) and tithes of the parish were given by the Empress Maud to Monkton Farley Priory A.D. 1150. About 1272 they were annexed to the Vicarage of Chippenham. [Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 44.] The church was rebuilt in 1805 out of the old materials, the windows and style of architecture being preserved.

¹ North Wraxhall parish is traversed by the Roman road called the Foss. At the North Eastern extremity of the parish where a glen divides it from Castle Combe, were discovered in 1859 the extensive remains of a Roman Villa, measuring about 130 feet by 33, and containing more than sixteen separate rooms, and passages, &c., with walls and outbuildings extending over

In the windowes at the Parsonage House are a great many Scallop-shells Or, and I think I remember Malette's coate there, [No. 179]. They say Malette had it, or something to doe here, heretofore. The Mannour House hath been ruined a long time; there remain yet the ruins of a pigeon house.

Mem. In the Church here Sir Wm. Button, Kt. & Baronet—the father—built, 165—, a vault in the N. Aisle, where he and his sonne Sir Wm., and his Lady, lye buried.¹ There is no Monument set up for them, but the pennons, which are now two or three acres. This was in a field commonly called "The Coffin Ground," belonging to Lord Methuen. An account of these remains, by G. Poulett Scrope Esq., is printed in the "Wilts. Archæol. Mag. VII. 59."

The name of the parish is spelled in Domesday Book "Werocheshalle;" in other ancient records "Wrockeshale." A "Commandry" or "Preceptory" was the title given to any messuage and lands that belonged to the Priory of St. John of Jerusalem: the governor of the House being called the "Commander." Aubrey's authority for saying that there was one here is not known.

The shield No. 178 is that of Wroxhall of Wroxhall co. Dorset: and probably also of the family who appear to have been owners here from the conquest to c. 1340. The name of Sir Godfrey de Wrokeshale often occurs in Wiltshire deeds. He was in 1266 a partizan of John Lord Giffard of Brimsfield at the battle of Evesham. [Fines.] There was a chantry chapel here dedicated to St. Mary (or All Saints,) probably founded by one of this family.

It is not easy to make out what the figure No. 177 is meant to represent. That Aubrey intended to correct his drawing is shown by his marginal note above, "I should have left the coate alone, &c.:" meaning perhaps that the surcoat should have been left plain, and not drawn as mail armour. From the staff, and rowelled spurs, which are unusual, it is perhaps a Knight Templar, (see the engraving of one in Dugd. Monast.); but if so, the staff ought to be surmounted by a Maltese Cross. Over their dress also, the Templars generally wore a mantle: but portraiture of this Order is rare.

It is doubtful whether the figure of the lady appearing to be under his feet was on the glass. There is still in the Church, now under the stove, the "battered" stone effigy of the "crossed-legged Knight, Sir Geoffrey," and by his side that of a lady recumbent. Aubrey may have hastily sketched the latter upon the same piece of paper on which he had drawn the Knight "Templar" from the window: and writing afterwards from memory he may have fancied that his sketch of the lady was also taken from the glass.

¹ After the family of Wroxhalls mentioned in the last note, who appear for the last time in 1351, Ralph de Brokenborough was lord of the manor and patron of the church and a chantry within it, to which he presented in 1361. In 1390 these belonged to the Cervingtons of Longford. [Hoare's Cawden, 27.] Edward son of David Cervington sold the Manor and Advowson to Thomas Yonge, M.P., Recorder of Bristol, and afterwards Chief Justice of the King's Bench. In 1453 this Lawyer was committed to the Tower for moving in the House of Commons that in case of issue failing to Henry VI., the Duke of York should succeed. He died 1477. [Sandford Geneal. Hist. 336.] Of this family were the Yonges of Colleton, co. Devon. [Ext. Barts.] Chief Justice Yonge had a son Thomas. In 1506 the Manor and Advowson belonged to William Malet Esq. of Enmore co. Somerset in right of his wife Alice daughter and heir of Thomas Yonge. (For pedigree of Malet see Hoare's Amesbury, p. 106). Hugh their son was owner 1525: and Thomas son of Richard Malet 1569. There was a Rector, Thomas Malet. Hence the arms in the old parsonage windows. The present one was built by Rev. Michael Wyatt who died 1830.

There had been some division of the original manor so early as 1406, as in that year Edmund Ford of Swainswick, near Bath, (whose brass, 1439, is in that Church. Collinson's Som: i. 155) had one third part of it, and presented, apparently in turn, to the Rectory and Chantry. This portion came to the Blounts of Bitton and Mangotsfield. Their heiress married Sir John Hussey (afterwards Lord Hussey of Sleaford co. Lincoln, beheaded 1536), from whom their lands here, and the advowson, were purchased in 1530 by William Button of Alton Priors. In 1667 his descendant Sir Robert Button, Bart., of Tockenham Court in Lyneham (which see), sold the manor and all his property here (the advowson excepted) to William Grove of Broadchalk, co. Wilts, who in 1682 sold it to Mr. James Wallis, from whom it descended to the Methuen family the present owners. The Advowson passed by the heiress of the Button family to Mr. Walker, and thence to G. H. W. Heneage Esq. of Compton Basset. It now belongs to Oriel College Oxford. In the "Wilts Institutions" many of the entries under the name of "Wraxhall" relate to Wraxhall cum Chilfrome, co. Dorset.

¹ There were two of this family Bishops of Bath and Wells. William Bitton, or Button 1247—1264: and William 1266—1274. The name of Bitton, changed by usual Wiltshire pronunciation into Button, seems to have been adopted from the parish of Bitton between Bath and Bristol. The arms of this family are the same as those of D'amneville, ancient owners both of that manor and of Mangotsfield.

In the Vault under the North Aisle in North Wraxhall Church are these interments. "Sir William Button Bart. (Senior), died January 28 1654." "Sir William Button Bart. (the son) died 8th March 1659," and "Dame Anne Button (Rolle) wife of Sir William died 4th February 1665." It also contains the remains of "Ezekiel Wallis Esq. of Lucknam, died 31st Dec. 1735 æt. 43," and of "his wife Cecilia (Selfe) who remarried John Coxed L.L.D. and died 28th January 1760 æt. 62." The rest are members of the Methuen family, by whom the Vault is now used.

¹ With respect to the meaning of the word Ford, the Rev. W. Barnes (Notes on Anc. Britons, p. 44) says that it is a British word, used by them to signify a road or passage, whether over a stream or on dry land: but that the Anglo Saxons when they adopted it, limited it to a road through water. The Scandinavian word Fiord does not mean a passage or way at all.

"Mount Sylla," as the hill above Ford is called, is possibly a corruption of "Mons Elleæ," from some Danish chieftain. In the Chronicles this Latin name occurs for other hills in Wilts. See "WROUGHTON."

² The true name of this parish is Eaton: Kaynel being that of a family to whom it anciently belonged. The inhabitants commonly call it Yatton: except when they wish to distinguish the main village from a hamlet within it called West Yatton: and then they recur to the original word, calling the former, Church Eaton.

In 1316, Fitzalan, Earl of Arundel and Henry de Lancaster, and in 1330 Edmund, Earl of Kent, were chief Lords of the manor. The Kaynels are found in adjoining parishes in temp. Hen. III., and in 1318 the name of William Kaynel first appears as patron of this rectory. In 1473 Richard Kaynel married Edith daughter of Thomas Hall of Bradford; and their granddaughter Elizabeth Kaynel an heiress brought a moiety of the manor, and 590 acres here and elsewhere, in marriage to Thomas Gore of Alderton, who died 1532 (ancestor of the Heraldic country gentleman of that name.) This moiety and the Advowson were sold by Richard Gore their grandson to the Snells of Kington St. Michael, (in whose pedigree is an intermarriage with Kaynel of Biddeston,) in 1557. One moiety of the manor of Yatton was held, 1587, under the Lordship of the Hundred of Chippenham. Sir Charles Snell sold it c. 1623. [Wilts. Mag. IV. 45.] The Yeoviltons whose arms are on the stone screen were, temp. Edw. III. owners of Easton Piers in the next parish : as well as of lands here. [Wilts. Mag. IV. 75.]

Two Rectors of this parish, George Child, 1661, and his son Williamson Child were very near of kin (the former is believed to have been uncle) to Sir Francis Child, Lord Mayor of London, the founder of the first Bank, in Fleet Street. Aubrey mentions this in Nat. Hist. of Wilts. 70. The name is still found in the adjoining parish of Castle Combe.

¹ In his "Nat. Hist. of Wilts." p. 79, Aubrey mentions that he "entered into his Grammar at the Latin School at Yatton Keynel, in the Church where the Curate, Mr. Hart, taught the eldest boys, Virgil, Ovid, Cicero, &c." Then follows a curious account of the way in which the old Missals of Malmesbury Abbey were destroyed by being used for book-covers, &c. The then Rector of Yatton was Mr. William Stump, great grandson of the wealthy clothier who had purchased the Abbey at the Dissolution. At page 81 of the same work, Aubrey also gives the strange adventures in Guiana of Capt. Thomas Stumpe, one of the Rector's sons.

YATTON KEYNES.

Commonly called West Yatton, is in this parish. At East Combe are of the names of Keynes still. I have a release of Thomas Keynes the sonne of William Keynes of Yatton Keynell, to his brother Henry Keynes, of all his estate in the parish of Yatton Keynell. Dat. Anno Reg. Philipp. et Marie, Dei gracia &c. primo et secundo. The witnesses names writt by the scribes, not by themselves.³

² The particular quarry meant is probably the very large one at Giddy Hall, of the Forest marble grit, yielding great flagstones. Speaking of these "sowre plants" in "Nat. Hist. of Wilts." p. 105, he observes, "Yet the cheese made at Broomfield in this parish was the best in the neighbourhood."

³ This belonged to the family of Keynes, of Somerford Keynes, Ashton Keynes, and Dorsetshire. There was a conveyance of lands to Roger de Keynes from Bartholomew Yeovilton and Ralph Cromhale, lords in chief of lands in Yatton in 1336: and the Deed mentioned in the text shows his descendants here in c. 1555.

The Abbot of Stanley also had an estate in both Yatton Major and Yatton Keynes, charged with maintenance of a chantry at Highworth. Being held with another of his farms, at Yewridge in Colerne, (about three miles off), the two are described in the Valor as "Euridge cum Yatton." The traces of this connection are not altogether lost: as some years ago the occupiers of Yewridge used to assert a right of sporting over West Yatton. The Abbot of Stanley presented several times to Yatton Keynell Rectory: but his right was disputed by the Kaynells, and seems to have been alternately lost and won.

In 1640 Thomas Wilde a Bristol merchant was principal land owner. He is mentioned by Aubrey [Nat. Hist. of Wilts.] as having built in 1635 at Longdean in this parish (purchased from the Tropenells) a paper mill, the trough of which was made out of a single oak from Langley Burrell. On a tablet to the Wilde family over the door of the church inside are the arms, Sable a chevron engrailed Or., but this shield is imperfect.

¹ West Yatton commands a fine view over Ford valley, Castle Combe, Colerne, &c. Near the principal farm house, now the property of Mr. Poulett Scrope, is a small building with a curious merchant's mark upon it. Not far from here is the ground formerly called Yatton Down, but now enclosed; where Whitaker and others place the battle of Ethandun. [See Wilts. Archæol. Mag. Vol. IV and V.]

¹ This Hundred takes its name, not from any place in North Wilts, but from one at the very Southernmost extremity of the County: viz., Damerham (properly Domerham) 11 miles below Salisbury, on the borders of Hants and Dorset. The origin of Broken—and still more, of what are called “Ragged”-Hundreds is very obscure: but that of North Damerham appears to admit of explanation. The Four Townships, Christmalford, Grittleton, Kington St. Michael, and Nettleton, were originally reckoned, the first in the Hundred of Sterkeley (which see), the three others in the Hundred of Chippenham. The Lordship of the Hundred of Sterkeley belonged to the Abbot of Malmesbury: that of Chippenham to the Gascelyn family. The Abbot of Glastonbury, being chief landowner in the Four parishes above-named, arranged for their severance from the old Hundreds to which they had belonged and formed them into one of his own. The Deed by which he obtained this concession from the Gascelyns is the one preserved by Aubrey in the Text, Appendix No. V. But the Abbot was also principal landowner of a large territory in the lowest part of the County including the abovementioned township of Damerham. And upon that Township he fixed as the place for the return of all Writs. This is specially stated in the Glastonbury Terrar. “The Bailiff of Domerham shall receive the return of all Writs touching the Liberty of the Abbot of Glastonbury throughout all Wiltshire, and for the same shall answer before the Justices, Sheriff, &c. and other his bailiffs, shall be to him attending and answering." One Bailiff being thus supreme, and the whole district being under one jurisdiction, the whole was included under one and the same name: being naturally divided, by the distance, into North and South Damerham. From the name of the Abbot mentioned in the above Deed, Godfrey (Fromont), this formation of the Hundred of Damerham North appears to have taken place between A.D. 1303—22.

The "Glastonbury Terrar" alluded to, is a fine Register of that Abbey's estates, containing minute particulars of the lands, names of tenants, boundaries and quantities, in the time of Abbot Beere, 9 Hen. VIII. (1517—18.) It forms Harl. MS. No. 3961.

² This name is now commonly written Christian Malford; the second name being pronounced with the accent on the syllable Mal. In its present shape, it admits of no meaning, and sets at nought all the rules that govern the composition of our English local names. It is evidently a corruption: and the old and proper name was "Christmal Ford." In Anglo Saxon, mæl, or mal, is, a mark, or sign: and "Christ's mal" is Christ's mark, or sign, the cross. In the account of the Foundation of an Abbey in the Anglo Saxon Chronicle, A.D. 657, the attestation runs thus: "I King Wulphere have subscribed it, with my finger on Christ's mal." "I, the Archbishop &c., grant it, with "Christ's mal:" i.e. making therewith the mark of a cross: the substitute used in those days, and not unfrequently in our own, for more accomplished performance in the Art of Writing. There are also a few instances of the word used as the name of a locality. In the Codex Diplomaticus, Charter 118, a well known boundary Tree is called "The Christmal Oak." The name of this Parish therefore means "Cross Ford:" and in the village there still happen to be the remains of a stone Cross. This explanation of the name, which has been confirmed by [Appendix. No. vi.—A.D. 940. Grant of Christmalford by King Edmund to St. Dunstan Abbot of Glastonbury. The original is printed in New Monasticon I. p. 51.

“We are instructed by a Great Preacher in the Holy Scriptures” (2. Cor. iv. 18) “that ‘the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.’ Those therefore who possess an abundance of the good things of life, are charged by the Holy Word in this text, not to set their hearts on the passing wealth of this world, but to fix them on spiritual things and press forward to the Kingdom of Heaven. Wherefore, I Edmund by Divine Favour King of the English and Ruler of many tribes have given to my faithful follower Saint Dunstan the Abbot, Twenty Manses at a place by Avon, which the common people, by a laudable custom and with reference to good Saxon scholars, is still further supported by the words in the Deed of A.D. 940 (Appendix No. VI,) thus rendered above into English. “A place by Avon which the common people, by a laudable custom, and with a noble allusion, call Christemal-ford.”

Christmal-ford belonged to Glastonbury Abbey for about 600 years. Soon after the Dissolution, the principal landowner was Edward De Vere, 17th Earl of Oxford. In 1575 Sir John Danvers of Dauntsey purchased the Manor. There was a partition of it between his sons, but by the marriage of his great grand-daughter Ann, daughter and coheir of Sir Henry Lee of Ditchley, it ultimately came to Thomas, 5th Earl of Wharton. His son Philip Duke of Wharton is said to have lost it at the gaming table. The next owner was Thomas Boucher Esq. in 1733, by whom it was sold to Mr. Herbert, and hence passed to the Earl of Caernarvon, now the chief proprietor.

Among other ancient owners of portions of the parish were the Hungerfords of Cadenham, 1578 to c. 1733. Walter Long Esq. 1584. George Worth 1611, Seymour, Hinton, and Ody. “St. John’s Mill,” near Highbridge, Aubrey supposed to have belonged to Bradenstoke Priory. [See “CADENHAM.”]

The Rectory was originally in the gift of the Abbot of Glaston but became severed from the Manor in this way. When Richard I was taken prisoner on his return from the Holy Land at the instigation of Henry IV then Emperor of Germany, one of the conditions of his release was that Savaric, a relative of the Emperor’s, should be appointed Bishop of Bath and Wells with the Abbey of Glastonbury annexed. This violent proceeding (A.D. 1199) produced great confusion amongst the Monks. A partition of Estates took place, and Christmalford manor and advowson (inter alia) were assigned to the Bishoprick. Subsequently, A.D. 1223, the manor was restored to Glastonbury, but the advowson remained with the See of Bath and Wells: and so continued until a late Order in Council transferred it for the future to the Diocesan, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

The “fair church-house” alluded to, after being long occupied as a Poor-House, has been taken down. The village Revel was not held at that house. The Parish Register does not go farther back than 1653: the earlier volumes having been burned when the Curate’s lodging was fired by lightning in 1693. By the “little manor of the Parsonage” is meant the Rectory Glebe. There was never any collegiate church here: and the wooden stalls have disappeared.

a noble allusion, call "Christemal-forde" to hold and enjoy the same for ever, &c. If any one by fraud shall attempt to defeat this our gift, let him reflect that he shall give account before the Tribunal of God at the day of Judgment, and be condemned to punishment with the reprobate whose sentence will be 'Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire.' (Then follow the Boundaries).

Signed by King Edmund, Ethelred his Brother, Wufhelm Archb. of Canterbury, and many others."

Appendix No. vii.—A.D. 1287. The Abbot of Malmesbury to the Abbot of Glastonbury.

"That in virtue of his Warrant, he has put the Prior of Bradenstoke into possession of the Service of the Abbot of Glastonbury's men, at the Prior's Mill of Christmalford. Dated at Malmesbury on the Morrow of St. Ambrose."

Appendix No. viii.—Feudage of the Prior of Bradenstoke.

"Be it remembered that 9 April 1287, Prior W. of Bradenstoke, (having very often taken upon himself to refuse, considering it to be not justly due from him) hath paid Feudage according to the custom of the country, to the Rev. Father, John, Abbot of Glastonbury, in the presence of Master J. Chancellour specially deputed by the Abbot for this purpose, for the Mill Mead near the Mill of Christemalforde. In the presence of W. Abbot of Malmesbury, Sir Henry de Besiles, Sir Henry de Cerne, Sir John de Blundestone, Kts. Adam of Ramsbury, Special Clerk and General Agent for the Prior of Bradenstoke, Silvester Doynes, Robert Russell, and many others."

Appendix No. ix.—Writ of admeasurement of Pasture against the Parson of Cristemalforde.

"Be it remembered, that in 1243, 27 Hen. III. on the eve of St. John Baptist, Michael, Abbot of Glaston, sued out a Writ at Wilton against Robert Parson, of Cristemalforde, for overstocking his pasture there. The Sheriff appointed both parties to meet and submit to just award, on the eve of the Translation of St. Benedict. A Jury being summoned, viz, Ralph of Sterkelie, William of Crosham, Adam Sturmy, John Lucas, John of Cnapwelle, Henry of Boxe, Ralph of Foxcote, Simon of Foxcote, Ralph Ryal, Robert Mauduit, Adam le Paximinster, and John Gefray, say, that for every hide of land in the said vill, should be reckoned 16 plough oxen, 4 Cows, 2 heifers, 50 sheep, and six pigs."

Appendix No. x.—The admeasurement of Pasture.

"The aforesaid Jury say that whereas the Abbot of Glastonbury had sued out a Writ against Wm. of Highway, Robert of Bremleigh, and Alexander of Boxe, for overstocking Cristemalford Pasture; for every virgate there should be reckoned 4 plough oxen, 2 cows, 1 heifer, 3 pigs and 12 sheep. That the Parson and Abbot should have full and equal right of common. But if the Parson incloses his land against the Abbot, the Abbot shall bar the Parson from pasture except for 4 heifers, 1 horse, 6 sheep, and 2 pigs: for which the Parson shall have pasture in right of 4 acres of meadow which he has beyond his inclosure.

Nicholas Haversham was Sheriff at this time.

* Mem. That Ten acres make one Fardell of land. Four Fardells one virgate. Four virgates one Hide. Four hides one Fee. This was written in a special note on the margin of the (Glastonbury) Legier Booke. J. A.

Do. Memorandum. Another dispute having arisen between Michael the Abbot, and Robert, Parson of Cristemalford, about Pasture, it was agreed; That the Abbot shall have for every hide of land, feeding for 16 plough oxen, 4 cows, 2 heifers, 50 sheep, and 6 pigs; and the Parson the same in proportion to his acreage, to run every where in the said Manor where the Abbot's cattle run, oxen with oxen, cows with cows, sheep with sheep, pigs with pigs, and heifers with heifers. On condition that the Parson shall open his inclosures after corn harvest and his meadows after mowing; for the Abbot's cattle to run there; the Parson's in like manner to run in the Abbot's ground. Witnesses, Adam Delamere, John de Eston, Philip de Cerne, Ralph de Foxcote, and others."]

GRUTELINGTON, now called GRITTLETON.

In the Church here is nothing of Antiquity to be found. The Rector hereof is now, 1670, Dr. (Thomas) Tulley, Principall of Edmund Hall in Oxford. Mem.: To this Parsonage, is a little mannour belonging, in this Towne, the like whereof I know not but at Christian Malford.¹

¹ The principal Manor, and Advowson, of Grittleton belonged for 600 years to Glastonbury Abbey. After the confiscation they were sold by the Crown in 1544 to the family of Gore of Surrendell and Alderton: from whom in 1601 the Manor was purchased by Henry White Esq., of Langley Burell. In 1707 his descendant Priscilla White, a coheiress, brought it in marriage to Joseph Houlton Esq. of Trowbridge, and of Farleigh-Hungerford, co. Somerset. He was ancestor of the late John Houlton Esq., sometime Lieutenant-Colonel of the Somerset Militia, who sold the estate in 1828 to the late Joseph Neeld Esq. On the site of the ancient residence, just before his death in 1856, Mr. Neeld erected the present House.

The advowson was severed from the Manor in 1604, and passed through various hands. It now belongs to the Rev. Thomas Burne Lancaster, Rector. The "little manor" spoken of by Aubrey, is only a farm that happens to have been frequently bought and sold with the Parsonage, but forms no part of it. CLAPCOTE, in this parish, was held in 1243 (under Glastonbury Abbey) by the Fitzurse family: in 1334 by John de Hales: in 22 Hen. VI. by the Blounts of Bitton. It was sold at the Dissolution to Mr. Gore the purchaser of Grittleton. Afterwards it belonged to the Jacobs of Norton, and by their representative Sir Robert Jacob Buxton was sold in 1851 to the late Mr. Neeld. In 1852 a leaden coffin, containing a skeleton and a few Roman coins, was found in draining "North Field:" and in another ground adjoining there were some traces of Roman building.

Grittleton Church (St. Mary) was formerly called All Saints. The nave arches are pointed, with Norman capitals. The tower is much later: about A.D. 1380. The Chancel is modern and poorly built. The Rectory house was built by Dr. Pollok.

[Appendix No. xii.] A.D. 1267. Plea of Right and Assize at Wilton on the morrow of St. Hilary 52 Hen. III.

[A Jury was summoned to try whether a messuage and 12 acres at Grutelingtone is free alms belonging to the Church of Grutelingtone of which Nicholas de Turri is Parson, or a lay fee of Roger Le Chapman. Nicholas saith that one John Le Clerke his predecessor was seised thereof in the time of Henry I, as of right belonging to the Church of G. and that Chapman holds it—who being summoned and re-summoned by the Sheriff comes not. The Sheriff is ordered to take possession. Judgment given in default.

The same Jury also try whether ten virgates are free alms of the said Church or a lay fee of John de Wintershull and Joan his wife. Nicholas saith that John Le Clerke his predecessor was seised—and that Wintershull holds: same result. The Jury say that to the Church the messuage and twelve acres formerly belonged, but that John Le Gros who was seised, as Parson, in Henry I. did in Henry III alienate the same in marriage with his daughter to William Ludington: and that W. L. gave it in marriage with his daughter to one Richard Le Dol. That the premises therefore belong to the Church of Grittleton: Nicholas to be put in possession, and Chapman and Wintershull at the mercy of the Court.]

(Manor.)

The Manor House at Kington was the Graunge of the Lord Abbot of Glastonbury. It was bought by (Nicholas) Snell, the Abbot's Reve, who payed halfe the money to the King: the arrears he kept in his hands, foreseeing the Fall of the Abbeyes.

Nicholas Snell new built the howse. The White Rose within the Red [Pl. xi. No. 197] common in those days, and the cognizance of the Queens of England, common in the two Queens dayes, viz, a Phænix O. on a Tower A. [No. 198.]

In Kington Parke is a well called Marian's Well. Here is a noble Carp Pond of about acres.

¹ The History of Kington St. Michael Parish by the writer of these Notes, will be found in the Wilts. Archæological Magazine, Vol. IV. pp. 36—128. The Tything of Easton Piers, though now included in the parish of Kington St. Michael, is in a different Hundred, viz. that of Malmsbury: under which it is placed in this volume. See Index "EASTON PIERS."

Mem. That before the Reformation the Parke at Kington St. Michael was in common to the Lord Abbot's tenants; and that the grounds of the Copie-holders in Kington neer to their houses, scil. westwards of their houses, did in the Abbot's time extend to the ditch in Ryding. This ground runs north from the Mannour house, and was taken away from the Tenants, to enlarge his prospect and pasture, by Nicholas Snell, formerly Reeve to the Lord Abbot, who bought the inheritance with the arrears of Rent detained in his hands, foreseeing the destruction of the Church-lands. Also the Tenants, Copy-holders, had parcells belonging to their respective Copie-holds in the west-field, then common, now enclosed, which was also taken from them by their new Land-lord Snell. So heretofore they were able to keep a whole plough; but since, having but work enough for half a plough, they live poorly and needily.

This information I had from my Grandfather Mr. Isaac Lyte: from his Father who remembered it: as also from Jo. Brome the Clerk, from his Father who did remember it.¹

In the faire pasture ground called "Ryding" is yet visible the  or Figure of Eight, for the horses for the great Saddle in Snell's time. So at Draycot.

The Estate is sold to another Family, viz. one Laford a Bristowe-man about 1679.

St. Michael, his old father (above 80) who had been clarke there before, dayly wore a gowne like an undergraduate's at Oxford, with the sleeves pinned behind. I doe believe that about the later end of Q. Eliz. time, t'was the fashion for grave people to wear such gownes. Mr. Wm. Shakespeare, Poet, in his monument in the Church at Stratford upon Avon his figure is thus: a Tawny sattin doublet, I think, pinked: and over that a black gown: the sleeves of the gown do not cover the arms, but hang loose behind.

The children's shoes were printed with silver figures, as the back of horn books, with St. George on horseback on red leather, and they wore yellow shoes, which I think they do still."

Kington was called Kington Monachorum or Kington Moine.

I doe guess Michael, Abbot of Glastonbury, dedicated it to Michael the Archangel, and built the steeple, and I believe did sett the spire upon the old Tower which is too weake and cracks, and will shortly fall. The Tower is, by the Windowes (see Woodcut 1,) much older than the spire.

6th day of October An: Dom: 1563: written by John Tayler, then Vicar, who was buried 1580. The next Vicar was (Nicholas) Fawkeners, who dyed (1612).

Mr. Richard Hine succeeded Mr. Fawkeners: and was here above 50 yeares. Mr. John Ferris succeeded him.

May 4th. A.D. 1582. The Plague began in this Parish, and rested y^e 6th. of Aug^r. following: 13 dyed of it; most of them of the Family of the Kingtons.

Nicholas Snell gave the Chalice. No Inscription, but on the cover of it is the crest of Snell, viz. a demy Talbot.

On the great Bell “• SANCTE . . MICHAEL ORA PRO . . BIS.”

He meant “Sancte Michael ora pro nobis.” The next bell, second, was cast 1618, the first was cast 1620.

Here was a daintie little bell 1600, stolen about 1649. Not long after, the little Bell at Sutton Benger was stolen too.

One Adam Milsham an old wealthie batchelour who was born in this parish gave in 1637, the clock and chimes, and £10, to the parish; the interest to pay for the lookeing to them. A smyth was clerke in the troublesome times, and converted the iron of the chimes to his owne use. A clocke the Parish hath gott lately again.

(Church Yard.)

Under a tombe by the Ch: porch lies ADAM MILSHAM aforesaid. The inscription, now illegible; he “died An^o. 1642. Cito pede præterit ætas.”

In the Ch: yarde near this,

“Here lyes the bodyes of RICHARD HINE, Clerke, and ANNE his wife. He was Vicar of this Parish 50 yeares and upwards, and buried the 28th. day of Aug^r. 1663; being 78 yeares. She was buried the 30th. of Jan^r. 1666, being aged 73 yeares.

“Spe Resurrectionis insimul obdormiunt.”

In the S. side thus,

“Under this Tombe here doth reside, as you may well remember,

“The bodie of Simon Neck, who dyed the 4th. of November.

“His age was 78 yeares, then his wife was fifty nine,

“Who dyed the last of May '47, and here she doth lye by'n.’

Under a stone, now illegible, lies honest old John Wastfield, a freeholder at Langley, in this parish. He dyed above 80 years of age, about 1644.

(Woodrooffe's Charity.)

Old (Wm.) Woodrooff, by his Will 166(4), gave (20^s. a year to the poor, and 10^s.) every yeere to the Vicar here to preach an Anniversary Sermon.

(Cross.)

The Cross stood at the Y gocusing to the Priory. In those dayes here was a little market Frydayes for fish, eggcs, butter, and such small gear. Perhaps chiefly for the Nunnes. On Michaelmas day, here is a Fayre much resorted unto by the young people, famous for ale and stubble geese. Q. when the first charter for it was graunted? (A.D. 1266.)

In the Legier booke of Glaston, is mentioned Mayden-well in this Parish.

Q. Where is it: and what virtue? Perhaps Alice Grig may know it. Biddlewell lyes between Kington and Swinley. It turnes milke. In Mr. Stokes's well at Kington was found store of spod.¹

DEEDS relating to the ancient MANOR OF KINGTON, extracted from the LEGIER BOOKE OF GLASTONBURY in the hands of Ralph Sheldon of Beoly Esq., called "SECRETUM DOMINI."

[1. Appendix No. xij. A.D. 934. Grant of Kington by King Athelstan. The original is printed in New-Monast. I. 59.

"I Athelstan, King of Anglia, raised by the power of the Almighty to the throne of All Britain freely give to my faithful servant Atheline a certain portion of land, viz., Fifteen cassates in a place which the inhabitants call "At Kingtone," to hold for his life free from all service with all its appurtenances, and on his decease to bequeath the same to whomsoever he may please, as his heir for ever. Whosoever shall presumptuously infringe this donation, let him perish in eternal fire with Judas the Traitor and blaspheming Jews.

Dated at Buckingham 12 Sept. A.D. 934. Witnessed by Constantine the Viceroy, and others."

2. Appendix No. xiv. A.D. 987. Grant by King Ethelred. New Monast. I. 51.

The FITZURSE family, at Swinley, Langley, and Clapcote in Grittleton.

3. Appendix No. xv. A.D. 1243. Jordan Fitzurse acknowledges service due to the Abbot.

"Know that I Jordan Fitzurse and my heirs are bound to Michael, Abbot of Glastonbury and the church there in 40s. sterling to be paid at two terms, viz., 20s. at Michaelmas A.D. 1243, and 20s. at Christmas following for scutage due to him for 1½ Knight's Fee which I hold of the Honour of Glaston, in Langley, Clapcote and Swinley. Whereof I have already paid 20s. on account of the same scutage, being that granted to our Lord the King Henry son of K. John when he sailed over to Gascony in the 26th. year of his Reign. And to such payment in full at the terms aforesaid I have bound myself and my heirs and have been distrained by the Abbot. In testimony, &c."

4. Appendix No. xvi. His Deed in completion thereof.

"Know, &c., that I Jordan Fitzurse and my heirs are bound to answer to the Church of Glaston for the service of a Kt's. Fee and a half. To wit, in Langley half a Fee, in Clapcote half a Fee, and in Swinley half a Fee. And that this may not be forgotten I have hereunto set my seal. Witn. Sir Robert Blakeford, Sir Henry de Hertham, Sir Wm. de Estone, John de Abbotstone, Sir Roger de Dantesey, Wm. de Haywode and others."

5. Appendix No xvii. A.D. 1243. Jordan Fitzurse acknowledges a Knight's Fee and a half in Swinley, Clapcote and Langley.

"Be it remembered, that 1243 Michael (of Ambresbury) Abbot of Glaston by his Bailiffs at Kington distrained Adam and Roisia of Clapcote for scutage of a Knight's Fee which they hold of the Honour of Glaston in Clapcote and Swinley, viz., For the scutage granted to King Hen. III for his expedition over sea to Gascony (1242). Whereupon A. and R. showed that they had paid the same to Jordan Fitzurse of Langley: that they hold the said fee of him: and he of the Abbot. Then the Abbot distrained Jordan for his fee at Langley. Whereupon Jordan demanded his chattels again, declaring that he is not bound for the scutage as the Abbot says. The Abbot not releasing, Jordan went to the Sheriff of Wilts, Nicholas de Haversham, and complains: gives a surety and recovers the chattels. The Sheriff summoned the Abbot by his Bailiff of Domerham, to show cause, &c. After reasonable interval, the Abbot appears in person at Wilton at Midsummer, and Jordan, by his son Jordan his attorney. Jordan being thrice called for his answer, gave none: and after an interval being called again, admitted that he would not prosecute. Whereon it is agreed that the chattels of Jordan, delivered by the Sheriff, viz. XXV beasts, be restored to the Abbot. And being restored to the Abbot's Park, Jordan came and acknowledged his debt to the Abbot for the scutage of the Fee wh. Adam and Roisia held at Clapcote: and for the half fee wh. he holds himself at Langley: and so forthwith paid it."

HEYWOOD, in Kington.

6. Appendix No. xviii. A.D. 1255. Quitclaim by William de Haywode.^a

"To all, &c. ; William de Haywode greeting: Quitclaims for himself and his heirs, to Roger, Abbot of Glastonbury (Roger Forde A.D. 1261—61) and the Convent there, all his right in an acre of arable in Kington Monachorum lying between the land of the Parson of Kington and the Cross of Roger Morin; and running East and West.

7. Appendix No. xix. Another Quitclaim by the same.

"William de Haywode quitclaims to the Abbot 4 acres of land in the East Field of Kington Monachorum; whereof 3 lie in the West Dene between the cropped ground of the Abbot on one side and a certain stream of water on the other: and one lieth in East Dene at the end of the acre which Hugh the woodward formerly held—near the stream aforesaid, &c. Witnessed by Sir John de Eston, John de Abbotstone, Jordan Fitzurse, Robert Curteys, &c."

8. Appendix No. 20. A.D. 1285. Chirograph between the Abbot of Glastonbury and Robert of Haywode, touching a certain ground in Kington, which Wm. le Wayte of Chippenham gave to the Abbot of Malmesbury.

"To all, &c.—Robert of Haywode—greeting. Know all men that whereas Wm. le Wayte of Chippenham and Edith his wife gave &c., to the Abbot and Convent of Malmesbury XXI acres and a half and 1 perch of land in Kington, as by deed &c.; And I by my deed have confirmed the said gift for myself and heirs, &c., to have and to hold the same in perpetual alms of my Lord the Abbot and Convent of Glaston: And whereas the said Wm. and Edith have been used to pay to me Royal Service so far as regards the said ground: I by this present Deed have bound myself and heirs, &c., to the Abbot and C. of Glaston: as the chief Lords of the Fee, to pay to them Royal Service when the Relief runneth due, as well for the aforesaid land as for my own land, whensoever it happeneth by my decease or that of my heirs: and to perform all services secular, Royal, and others, for the said Abbot and Convent of Malmesbury, the past alienation of the said land notwithstanding. In testimony whereof, &c.

Witnessed by Sir Godfrey de Wroxall, Reginald Burel, Henry de Cerne, Knights, Richard Horne, Adam Harding, Roger de Caynes, and others. Dated 2. April 1285."^b

It hath been set forth to us, Sire, by Sir Thomas Beauchamp our Cousin, who holds of us a Tenement in Edenworth with appurtenances, which Tenement we claim to hold of you and your church, that you have caused him to be distrained for the Homage which you demand of us for the same: And whereas, Sire, we are in great sickness and feebleness of body so that we could not journey unto you, we pray you as heartily as we can, for Gods sake and for the love you bear us, to respite the distress until we shall be in such bodily health as to be able to come and do the said homage. For we well know, and wish and are bound to acknowledge that we hold and claim to hold the said Tenement of you and of your church and that to you and your church we are bound to Homage and Royal Service, whensoever it falleth due, according to the ancient custom of so doing. 10. Appendix No. xxii. A.D. 1255. John of Artherne, excuses himself from doing suit in person at the Hundred Court of Kington.

"To the venerable and our beloved in Christ, Robert, by the grace of God, Lord Abbot of Glastonbury, John Artherne greeting, with reverence and honour.

Seeing that through hindrance of much business I am not able, an it please you, this year to do the suit at your Hundred of Kington, as, like the freeholders of the said manor, I am bound to do in person, I beseech your Lordship, to admit Roger Rugge as my attorney for the same. "Jordan Cotel, Rector of the Church of Kington, binds himself never to alienate, to any Religious House, or Parson of a Church, without the consent of the Abbot, an acre of land which he had of Wm. of Heywood, part of the Fee of the Abbey."

13. Appendix No. xxv. A.D. 1269. The same.

"The same Rector agrees with the Abbot, to abide by the decision of certain arbitrators, touching a piece of ground sometime the Abbot's Pinfold, a curtilage, and 2 heifers seized by the Abbot. Dated at Mells, St. Denis's day."

14. Appendix No. xxvi. A.D. 1269. An Agreement between the said Rector, and Abbot Robert Pederton, touching the feeding of Inwood.

"Whereas the Abbot had deprived the Rector, of Common of Pasture for all his cattle, had erected certain houses at Kington Langley, and obstructed a road between the wood of Inwood and 'La Sterte,' &c.: It is agreed that the Rector's pigs shall run with the Abbot's at all times, in Inwood, provided that the said pigs go in and out, through the middle of the Abbot's courtyard, and no way else. That the Rector shall have right of road for carriages; the Abbot to set up a fence whenever the ground is sown; and when the crop is removed, the Rector to have free ingress for cattle with the Abbot's, to 'La Sterte,' in lieu of which he quitclaims all common of pasture at Inwood, saving for the pigs as aforesaid: and releases the Abbot from all damages incurred by building the houses."]

PRIORY ST. MARY'S.¹

(For Aubrey's sketch, see Pl. xiii. No. 218).

This is a very pleasant seate, and was a fine Nunnery wherein were Nunnes; they were Benedictines, and under the jurisdiction of Glaston.² Mrs. Tyndale has told me that it was Maud the Empresse was the foundresse. In the Legier booke of this howse I cannot find who founded it, nor get the favour, tho' no danger, to see the donation. Mr. Sherwin hath bought this estate.

The Coppice, and that ground between Easton Pierse and this place, was given out of the Wood-close by S^r. John of Eston, to the Nunnes here, to pray for his soule, & of his wife & children: tempore.....

Below this wood, on the other side of the Rivulet, is a little meadow, called "the Minchin," which word in old English is a Nunne: so, Mincing i.e. Minchin—Lane in London, where was a Nunnery. On the east side of the howse is a ground facing the east, and the delightfull prospect on the south east, called the Nymph-hay. Here old Jaques, who lived on the other side, would say, he hath seen 40 or 50 Sisters—nunes, in a morning, spinning with their rocks¹ and wheelles and bobbins. He said the number often was 70; he might not be mistaken perhaps in the number of woemen; for there might be as many, nuns, lay sisters and pensioners; but Nunnes only not so many. Their last Priest was Parson Whaddon, whose chamber is that on the right hand of the porch, with the old-fashion chimney.

² This is incorrect. The Nunnery was under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Salisbury. In the "Langton" Registers at Salisbury is a curious forged document by which in 1490 the Prioress attempted to exchange the Bishop's jurisdiction for that of the Abbot of Glaston. See the particulars of this story in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag., just referred to.

Mem: In the Legier Booke is mention of Eleanor Priorissa.

The Lady Cicelie Bodenham was Lady Prioress here. In the parlour windowe was, and in the Buttrey yet, the coat of Bodenham with a mitre to which were two chains Or. Also the coat [No. 221], of Bodenham and viz. Az. a fess Or between 3 chess rooks, quartering G. three bars checky A. and S. This coat is at Foffont Church in this County, but with barry of six, checky ... and G. She (Lady Cicelie) was Prioress of a little Nunnery there, and built the S. aisle of that church, where her coate is. Perhaps she might be preferred thither.²

Also in the parlour window, this coat [No. 222] G. 2 bars nebulè O., above the coat a Mitre. The Lord Lovell's coat was barry of six nebulè O. and G: which in Mr. Wythie's Ordinary is by the name of Basset, but Lovell's coat, of Co. Bucks. is the same, with a canton ermine.

Ralph Basset and Tho: Basset bear, Undeè gold and red. Sr. W. Dugdale's usage of bearing of armes, p. 19. I am confirmed by Sir W. Dugdale. This is Basset.³

² Lady Cicely Bodenham was promoted from Kington St. Mary's nunnery to Wilton, of which she was Abbess at the surrender. The Manor of Fovant belonged to the Nuns of Wilton, but there was no separate religious house at Fovant.

In divers pannells of glass about this howse are the letters B. D. The last Ladie Prioress was the Lady Mary Dennys of Gloucestershire: [No. 223] this Lady Dennys lived a great while after the Reformation, and died within the memory of man in Somersetshire.¹ From my grandfather Lyte.

In the Chapell, which was very fayre, is neither glasse, chancell nor monument remayning. Formerly, and lately, in the garden, where chancell and consecrated ground was, have been digged up severall coffins of freestone: and one stone was found of about two foote diameter. To what use it served I could never learne; it was about the thicknesse of a grinding stone, having in the centre on one side a heart held between two handes [No. 224]: it was found at the foote of a grave, in which there was found a Chalice.²

The windowes of the Chapel of Priory St. Marie's [No. 219] like those in the Tower of Merton Coll. Oxon. (? Ed.)

In the old Hedges belonging to this Priory, and in the hedges of the Priory Downe are yet a good number of Berberry Trees and which t'is likely the Nunnes used for Confections, which art they taught the young Ladies that were bred up there: for in those days the woemen were bred at Nunneries. No such schools as at Hackney and Sarum for woemen until after the Reformation.

Moreshall in this parish belonged to this Priory. Q. who gave it?³

² In Aubrey's MS. "Remains of Gentilism" fol. 146, he says this stone was found in 1637 in the chapel: and was 16 inches in diameter: both the hands were right hands. Mr. Thoms ["Anecd. and Tradit." Cam. Soc. p. 107] says "this kind of sepulchral stone was placed where the heart of a deceased person was interred apart from the corpse" (?). Two hands supporting a heart was the device on a seal used by Reginald Husee, 3 Edw. III, with the legend "Cor immobile." [Hutch. Dors. howse; it is about the middle of the village on the north side of the way.

Old John Westfield told me that he had been Peterman in the beginning of Her Majestie's Raigne. The Revell is still kept the Sunday following St. Peter's day, (June 29.) it is one of the eminentest Feastes in these partes.

The family of Gengel (mentioned in Deeds, Appendix xxxi. and xxxii.) continues yet in this parish, and it was but about 1664, that the ancient estate here of them was sold to one Samuel Martin; it is about an hundred poundes per annum.

LANGLEY FITZURSE.

In Langley is another little Mannour called Langley Fitzurse. The Hill that leades up to Langley from Kington, is to this day called Fitzurse-hill. The Estate is now Mr. Bampfild Sidenham's who bought it of the heirs of the Lord Hopton. It is a very ancient-built howse with a great Hall, and moted about: here is the chapell bell yet left. There is a piece of a tradition yet left among the old people that a king once lived here.

[DEEDS, extracted by Aubrey, from GLASTONBURY ABBEY CARTULARY, relating to Kington Langley.

1. Appendix No. xxvii. A.D. 940. Grant of Langley by King Edmund to his Servant Wilfric.
Printed in the New Monast. I. p. 60.

The first two lines of the original Latin are Hexameters. The introduction is a specimen of the strange bombast commonly used as preface to legal documents in those days.

"O Cross! that excellest and rulest over all Olympus, glorious law and foundation of the throne of Christ our Lord, my Alpha and Omega; bless with thy mark the beginning, middle and end of this present writing. Thou also more brilliant than the stars, and more holy than any gifts in the sight of Christ, hast endowed with the fullest rights the Royal House of Edmund King of the Anglo-Saxons. WILFRIC, enriched by Sovereign bounty is able to proclaim with truth, so that to all others by the character of this document it may be made known, viz. That under favour of God, in the nine hundred and fortieth year, since, to the world, waiting for the Holy Spirit, the Virgin Mother presented her Divine progeny, and in the second year of his Reign, the said King endows the said Wilfric with 30 Tenements at Langley, to himself and his heirs. Let all therefore now and for ever ponder the wise saying of a Christian writer: "Render, O ye rich, unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the things that are God's. Do works of piety and justice, and you set an example to the Catholic Church." [Then follow the boundaries.] Confirmed by King Edmund to Archbishop Wulfhelm at the well-known town of Chippenham."

2. Appendix No. xxviii. (no date.) Reginald Bosket gives his land at Combe and Langley to the Church.

"Know, &c.: that I Reginald Bosket with the consent of Herbert Frankchivaler my Lord, and Juliana his daughter, my wife, have given, &c. to God and the Church of St. Mary of Glaston: all my land at Combe and Langley which I received in marriage with my wife: three shillings per annum being reserved to me and my heirs in lieu of all services. For this grant, Roger Fitz-Edwin (?) has given me 10s: to Juliana my wife 12d. and to Thomas my heir 12d. and to Herbert Frankchivaler 12s.: since out of special love to the said Roger, now a Monk of Glastonbury, we have made the said gift. Witnesses, Alured Ferling, &c."

3. Appendix No. xxix. HERBERT FRANKCHIVALER consents to the grant.

"Know, &c: (concluding thus). This Deed was read in full assembly on St. Giles's day at Exeter. Witnesses, Julian Pokehelle and others, all good men of the Hundred of Langley."

4. Appendix No. xxx. Milo Fitzurse to the Abbot.

"Milo son of Milo Fitzurse de Langley grants to Robert, Abbot of Glaston, a Perch of land on the South side of Maydenwell, in Langley North field, to enlarge his Mill of Bidemill."

5. Appendix No. xxxi. A.D. 1273. Roger Gengel of Langelegh and Alice his wife, to the Abbot.

"Know that whereas Robert, Lord Abbot of Glaston, has granted to us for life half an acre which Robert Long of Langelegh once held there and by reason of his poverty surrendered, rented at 12 pence, or one sheep of the same value, and the customary service of mowing Pegingehulle Mead, the same shall revert at our death to the said Abbot: &c. Dated at Kington St. Michael."

6. Appendix No. xxxii. Thomas Gengel's gift to the Church of Glaston.

"Gives one perch and a half of land in Langelegh lying under Bidemille Mill in the North field of Langley. Witnesses, Sir John of Eston Kt., Thomas Delamere, and others."

7. Appendix No. xxxiii. (before A.D. 1261.) Jordan Fitzurse to the Abbey.

"Jordan Fitzurse of Langley gives to Robert de Pederton, Monk of Glastonbury, for his life, and to the Abbot and Convent for ever, a Mill and Pond, near the spring called Maydenwell in the manor of Kington, for the supply of the mill pond. Also five perches of land. For the above, Robert has given two marks sterling. Witnessed by Sir John of Eston, Kt., &c."

8. Appendix No. xxxiv. A.D. 1280. Reginald Burel, Lord of Langley.

"Whereas disputes have arisen between the Abbot of Glaston and his men of Kington St. Michael and Langlegh on one part, and me on the other, concerning the impounding of beasts trespassing within the woods of Langley Burel: Reginald engages to put a fence on that side of the woods which abuts on the common pasture of the Abbot; and if the fence is broken, to drive out beasts without impounding them. Witnesses—Henry Cerne, John Greensted, Kts.: Thomas Delamere and others. Dated Marlborough Monday after St. Denis, 9. E. I."

(Camely, co. Somerset.)

9. Appendix No. xxxv. Aubrey includes the following among his Kington Langley Deeds: but he seems to have mistaken the name of Burel for Burnell one of which family was also a Benefactor to Glaston Abbey, to which "Camleigh" belonged; [See Collinson's Somerset II, 125 and New Monasticon, I, p. 15.]

"John Burel (should be Burnell) of Camely grants to his daughter Agnes a house and curtilage in Camely near the croft of Alexander his brother, and 5 acres called "La Gore," for the rent of a pair of white gloves, value one farthing. Witnesses, John Crumhale of Faringdon, Philip Kether of Littleton, Anquetil of Hinton, &c."]

NETELINGTON.

At Nettleton, for so it is now called, is a well built Church; but the windowes all broken by the fanatic rage of the late times. The Church-house was the handsome stone house thereby, with a crosse at the end of it. The bells are all new cast.¹ Q. When the Revell is here.

¹ A large part of the parish and village is called Burton. The Manor and Advowson of Netlington belonged till the Dissolution, to Glastonbury Abbey. Among Sir H. Ellis's "Original Letters" Vol. II, 379, is one from Abbot Whiting placing this Rectory at the disposal of Secretary Thomas Cromwell, instead of Batcombe which he had asked for. The Manor and Advowson were purchased at the Dissolution by the Botelers (owners of Badminton for 400 years till about 1608). Early in Queen Elizabeth's reign John Astley purchased them: and after other changes during the same reign, they came to Sir Richard Grobham of Great Wishford, a gentleman who was said to have made a very large fortune as Steward to the Gorges family of Longford Castle. [History of Branch and Dole, p. 46.] Sir Richard died childless 1628 and left his estates to his sister's son afterwards Sir John Howe, Bart. These consisted of the Manors of Great Wishford, Steeple Langford, Stapleford, West Kington, Nettleton, Netheravon cum Hackleston, Combe, Compton, Bemerton and Quidhampton: the Hundred of Malmesbury, the Hundred and Borough of Highworth, the Advowsons' of Wishford and Netelington, and Rectory of Enford, all in Wilts. In this family Nettleton remained till the death in 1804 of John Howe, fourth and last Lord Chedworth. In 1806 the Manor and Advowson were purchased by Andrew Carrick of Clifton, M.D.: after whose death in 1837 they were sold by his Trustees.

The Priory House (part of the Abbot's estate) was taken down in 1852 and a new one built on the site by Mr. Hill. Five hundred and twenty six acres of common were enclosed in this Parish by Act of Parliament, 1812. The Blounts of Bitton had a small estate here, in 1443.

The Church (St. Mary's) is of different periods. The pillars and arches between the nave and aisle, and the font, are Norman. The windows have had good stained glass. The Pulpit is of stone, with vine-wreath carving. There is a Tower at the West end, and a pretty porch on the North side. John Hewett, Rector here 1455, is mentioned as one of the "Penitentiaries" for the Deanery of Malmesbury.

In the Church yard was this old Epitaph, not long since legible :

Here lies a traveller old madam Besse,
Honest Charles Hales his wife I guesse.
She was his dear one, we'll not belie her ;
And so's mine too ; wou'd shee lay by her.

In this Parish, in a field that faces Combe Castle, is an ancient monument called Lugburys : it lies Northward and S-ward. paces long.¹

[1. Appendix No. xxxvi. A.D. 943. Grant of Netelington by K. Edmund to his Servant Wulfric.

"Our Lord JESUS CHRIST being King for ever : The Catholic Fathers admonish us from Holy Writ, to remember how this transitory world, though daily older by the lapse of time, yet is waning whilst it grows, and is shortened whilst it is prolonged : and that by frequent sudden injuries of various assailing forces, the end of all things is perceived to be nigh. By the means of earthly things that perish we should therefore purchase to ourselves, heavenly things that will endure. Wherefore I Edmund, King of the Anglians, and ruler of other neighbouring tribes, have vouchsafed to bestow upon a certain Servant of mine named Wulfrie, for his obedience and fidelity, Twenty Tenements, called in English "Twenti-Hide," at a place which by the confluence of people has long been called 'At Netelintone'—To be a perpetual inheritance : &c., &c. Now if any son of Belial shall venture to impugn this our purpose, may he be condemned at the Day of Judgment to everlasting fire, unless in this world he shall have repented in tears. [Then the boundaries.]

Done A.D. 943. by Edmund, Odo Archb. of Cant., &c. This land was left by Wulfrie after his wife's decease ; which bequest, Elswin, becoming Monk and returning to the Monastery, fulfilled."

"Christ being the Disposer of all kingdoms. I Edwi in the first year of my reign, swaying the sceptre of the realm of England, grant to my singularly faithful Abbot of Glaston Elswi 20 Tenements at the place commonly called by the inhabitants, 'At Netelintone.' To be inheritable, and free of charge, except, &c.

Done A.D. 956. ✚, I Edwy the King have irrevocably consented. ✚, I Edgar the King's brother have cheerfully agreed. ✚, I Odo, Archbishop, have confirmed, with the sign of the cross."

HIGHWORTH, CRICKLADE AND STAPLE HUNDRED.¹

BLOUNDESDON (St. Andrew's).²

STANDS nobly, it is beheld by a stately prospect from the South-west: it is a faire gothique house, with a great Hall after the old fashion, built by the Lord Chandois temp. Hen. 8. In the Church or house is nothing for an Herald. Traditur, that the Church here was sometime larger than it now is, and that here was a village adjoining, as appears by the ruins, which howses were swallowed up by the Mannour house.

1. HIGHWORTH. In the Latin Hundred Rolls it is called "Altel-burgh," and sometimes simply "Worth." The Lordship belonged in 39 Hen. III. (1254) to Baldwin Redvers, or De Insulâ, Earl of the Isle of Wight, and, he being a Minor, it was in the hands of the Queen as his guardian. It made no return to the Sheriff. In 1280 Adam Stratton held it. [See "SEVENHAMPTON."] In 1316 it belonged to Margaret the Queen Dowager widow of King Edw. I. In 1 Edw. VI. (1547), having been then also part of the late Queen's jointure, it was granted, with Cricklade Hundred and the Bailiwick of Bisley, co. Gloucester, to Thomas Lord Seymour of Sudeley. At the Dissolution the Bailiwick of the Hundred was leased by the Crown to John Warneford. The Hundred and Borough belonged to John Howe, Lord Chedworth, who died 1804: and in 1806 were purchased by William Crowdy Esq.

2. CRICKLADE. The Lordship of this Hundred also belonged to Baldwin de Insulâ as above: and likewise made no returns to the Sheriff. In 9 Edw. II. (1316) it was also the Queen Dowager's, as above: when it included Cricklade, Polton, Ashton Keynes, Cerncote, Somerford Keynes and Latton.

3. STAPLE, or STAPELEE. King Henry II. gave the Lordship of this Hundred to Odred his Falconer, whose heirs, Adam de Peryton and Hugh Peverell, held it in 39 Hen. III. (1254), free of the Sheriff; they held their own View of Frank Pledge, and had return of Briefs, "by ancient Liberty." In 1275 the Lordship belonged to the families of Keynes and Paynell: in 1316 to the Despensers. It included Chelworth and Purton. [See the Hundred Rolls.]

² About three miles from Swindon. In 1282 Roger de Writele gave land in Blunsdon to the Abbess of Godstow. For the estate which he held he did suit at the court of Adam Stratton of Sevenhampton. A Charter of A.D. 1321 (Inq. a. q. d.) witnesses that the Advowson was in

In Mortimer's Leiger Book: "Duo feod. milit. cum pertinent. in Bloundesdon, in Com. Wiltes, quæ Johannes As tenet, et que ad xiiij^l. vi^s. viij^d."

I have been credibly informed by Mr. Ph. Laurence that at the Bull in this that year appropriated by Robert Hungerford to the Monastery of Ivy Church: but this gift seems to have been defeated. This Manor (held under Dunstanville of Castle Combe and Mautravers, jointly, see Wilts. Archæol. Mag. II. 282) and the Advowson, belonged A.D. 1201—1348 to a family whose name is variously spelt, As: Ace: Aze: Aas: or Wace. A Henry de Blunsdon was Almoner to Edw. I.; a chantry, with a priest to pray for his soul, was founded in Sarum Cathedral c. 1398. In 1361—98 the manor belonged to Fitzwarine; in 1440 to Andrew; in 1445 to John Stafford, Archbishop of Canterbury, [see "NORTH BRADLEY;"] in 1454 to James Audley; in 1459 to John Ferris (or Ferrars) who was Sheriff of Wilts. This family was twice in trouble. In 1. Hen. VII. Ferris of Blunsdon was attainted as a partisan of Rich. III.: and an Edmund Ferris of Blunsdon St. Andrew was included in the attainder of Edmund Delapole, 2nd. Duke of Suffolk, in 1513, when the manor was granted to Sir Giles Brydges. His son, Sir John, was created 1554 Baron Chandos of Sudeley, and lived here. Henry, 2nd. Earl of Clarendon was owner in 1667. This family presented to the living the Rev. Josiah Pullen, afterwards Vice Principal of Magdalen Hall, Oxford; whose favourite elm is still known as "Joe Pullen's tree," on Headington Hill near that city. About 1770 the Clarendon family sold their estate. The Kecks of Great Tew, Oxon, were proprietors here in 1714, whose estate has passed to its present owner Mr. Calley.

BURY BLUNSDON is so called from an ancient Burgh or Camp on a hill. This is described by Sir R. C. Hoare, Anc. Wilts. ii. 39, as different from many that he had seen, and as presenting some singularities he could not account for. The manor belonged in 1300 to Golafre, holding under Ryvers.

Connected with BLUNSDON GAY are found in 1316 Adam de Gay; in 1398 Mortimer, Earl of March; in 1437 Lovell of Titchmarsh; in 1469 Roger Bavent. Alexander Heydok had one third of the manor in 1544. Michael Dennys one third in 1564. John Samborne Jun. one third in 1570. (Jones's Index.)

At BROAD BLUNSDON (St. Leonard's), the living of which is attached to Highworth, among other owners were, in 1316 Margaret Queen of England: Gilbert de Ellesfield, 1319: Walrond, a very ancient family here (see Fines) and Montacute Earl of Sarum. For a description of a brass in the Church of Broad Blunsdon to a Lady, name unknown, A.D. 1608, see "Kite's Wiltshire Brasses," p. 80.

¹ The ancient name was simply "Worth," place or village, sometimes Latinized into Vorda. From the situation, it became Alta Worth, Altel-burgh, or High-worth. At the Conquest it was demesne of the Crown. From Hen. III. to Hen. VI. the families of Mandeville, and Ryvers of Towne, at one Hartwell's, is to be seen a skull of a vast bignesse, half as big again as an ordinary one: which see.

LATTON. (In Cricklade Hundred).

About 1670 was found in a ploughed field at Latton near Cricklade, a pavement of Opus tessellatum, which they told me was chequer-work of about 2 or 3 inches square. Colours of the stones were black, white and red. [Mon. Brit.]

This estate belongs to Down Amney.¹ In the church is nothing for an antiquary

Tormarton co. Gloucester were principal owners: and at Freshdeane, the De L'isles. Hampton retains the surname of Robert de Turville, 1316. In 1365 Sir Thomas Hungerford gave to Edingdon Monastery various lands in Hampton and Westhorp, late Ryvers's, Walter Berton's, and Aylmer's, with a ferry at Freshdeane: for the Foundation of Obits to his family. Mr. Lemon's "Domestic Calendar, State Papers," p. 169, mentions "Particulars of the manor of Escrope (Esthorp) in Highworth, late in the tenure of Thomas Lord Seymour, on payment of a certain rent, 2lbs. of wax, a pair of gilt spurs, 1 rason of ginger, and 1 pair of gloves. Weldon's suit."

The Tithes of the Parish were given by Wm. I, to Osmund, Bishop of Old Sarum. (In Henry the Second's Charter to that Church, A.D. 1162, Highworth Rectory is called "Ecclesia de Wydha.") The Prebend of Highworth was ordained and made by Margery Ryvers. [See "SEVENHAMPTON."] There is a List of the earlier Prebendaries in "Antiquities of Abbey Church of Bath and Salisbury," p. 325. The Parish Church was used as a garrison by the Royalists in 1644. The Warnefords are buried in the South aisle. John Potenger Esq. controller of the Pipe, son of Dr. J. Potenger, Master of Winchester School, was buried at Highworth in 1733: Arms, a bend lozengy between 6 fleurs de lys. In "Hone's Year Book" p. 915, is an account of some curious proceedings at the funeral of a female gypsy in August 1830. A. D. Hussey Esq. of Salisbury is Lay Rector.

There was a chantry of St. Nicholas endowed out of lands at "Stodley grange and Mighale" both near Lydiard, Thickwood (in Colerne), Yatton Keynell, and Clapcote (in Grittleton), of which the Abbot of Stanley near Chippenham was patron. In 1456 he presented John Salve. At the Dissolution a chantry-house was purchased by Reve and Cotton, two speculators in church property.

¹ "Latone and Eisy" were united by a Saxon Earl. They were given by King John to Cirencestre Abbey; and, under the Abbey, Latton was held on lease by a branch of the Stutville or Estoteville family who settled here, and were thence called De Latton. Many particulars of them are given in Ashmole's Berks, iii. 330—363. Camden ("Remains") contends that surnames were first given for distinction of families, which afterwards descended to the eldest son only, the rest taking their names from their possessions. He quotes this case as an example. In the Monasticon is a copy of a curious grant (1305) by the Abbey, of a Corrody, or maintenance to observe.¹

Mem. The Priory by Cricklade in the rode to Cirencester.² The East window in the Chapell is like that at St. Abb's by Pembroke College in Oxford.

The country people say, that as Creekelade hath his name from Greeke being taught there, so this place hath its denomination from the teaching here Latin. Perhaps both their names, as to part, come from the British word Laith, which is a marasse, which well agrees with both these places: so Long-leat, laith, is as much as to say Long-marsh.³

LYDYARD-MILLICENT, alias NORTH-LYDYARD.⁴

In the Church, in the South Aisle, is an ancient large seate, now belonging to Antony, Lord Ashley, Chancellor of the Checquer, on the timber of the seate thus:
R. H. C. MARIA DER (?) ROBERTUS RUSSELL MC JESTCE.

consisting of fourteen white loaves and nine gallons of beer every week so long as they live, to John de Latton and Isabel his wife, for surrendering their rights in a lease granted to his father. Prater was a family here in 1565.

At the Dissolution Latton was purchased by the Hungerfords of Down Ampney. The Manor, and Rectory impropriate, were in this family in 1629: from whom, by their heiress, it passed to Dunch of Wittenham, Berks.

² The Prior of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist at Cricklade had some land at Latton.

⁴ Some account of the descent of this manor may be gathered from that of Melcombe co. Dorset with which in ancient times it seems to have been connected, as to ownership. [Hutchins, II. 423.] It is probable that in order to distinguish it from Lydiard Tregoz, this parish retained the Christian name of a Lady who was owner temp. King John. In a Fine of that date, "Hugh son of William granted to his brother Richard the Vill of Lidiard after the death of Milisent his mother." Her own family name is lost, but she was probably the wife of a Clinton: as in Hen. III. and Edw. I., the Clintons of Coleshill co. Warwick were landowners here: either in their own right, or under the Newburghs, and then the Beauchamps, Earls of Warwick. In 1347 Clinton's estate was held by Ralph Basset of Drayton co. Stafford, and about 1457 by Robert Turges who was also patron of the Rectory, to which, in 1465 William Browning, in right of his wife Alice Turges, presented, and in 1515, Baskett. All these names occur also in the descent of Melcombe abovementioned. The Baskett family disappear about 1576 when they sold their estate to Wm. Richmond alias Webbe. [Of this family there is a Pedigree in the Wilts. Visit. 1623.] After 138 years, the Webbes sold in 1714 to Sir John Askew. The daughter of his brother Ferdinand Askew, married Colonel Blunt: from whose family the Manor passed by sale in 1811 to the Rev. Henry Thomas Streeten. The Lordship of the Manor had been for some years a subject of dispute, but by a recent Trial at Salisbury (1860) between the Streeten family and the Earl of Shaftesbury, it has been awarded to the former.

Among other names of ancient landholders here are, Robert le Archer 1280, Robert Russell 1307, Roger Normaund 1349, John Russell 1472, William Lock 1587. In 1274 Godfrey de Aspail gave land to the Priory of Bradenstoke. In 1476 John Yorke held some land for a chantry at Ramsbury.

Of the Font, which is circular and Norman, of about A.D. 1150, there is an engraving in "F. A. Paley's Baptismal Fonts." The Rectory in the 14th century belonged to the Priory of Newent co. Gloucester: afterwards was in the gift of the Crown: and from 1460 to the present time has passed through many different patrons. It now belongs to Pembroke College, Oxon.

¹ The name of Purton was anciently spelled Piri-ton, or Pury-ton, meaning, in Anglo Saxon, the Pear-tree inclosure. The Rectory and principal Manor, described as "35 hides of land on the East side of the wood called Braden" were given by King Chedwalla to Bishop Aldhelm for the foundation of Malmesbury Abbey. At the Dissolution the Abbey's manor was in lease to Margaret Pulleyne, widow, and some part of Braden was then leased by the Crown to the Earl of Warwick. The Rectory was granted to Brydges, Lord Chandos of Sudeley. In 1629 the Manor and Advowson belonged to Sir John Cooper father of the first Earl of Shaftesbury. The Earl's grandson, the Hon. Maurice Ashley (who dropped the name of Cooper,) M.P. for Weymouth, and Translator of Xenophon's Cyropædia, resided, and with his wife Katharine Popple, was buried here. [See Inscription, Hutchins's Dorset, II, 216.]

Lord Chancellor Clarendon's house now belongs to the Earl of Shaftesbury. On a chimney piece is the shield of arms of the Chancellor's grandmother, one of the Sibell family: viz., a tiger looking backwards in a mirror. (See "TISBURY"). This coat was also on the church windows of Thame, co. Oxon. In his "Life," vol. I, p. 9. octavo, Lord Clarendon mentions that in his 17th year being seized with an illness at the Middle Temple, his friends much feared a consumption, so that his uncle" (Sir Nicholas Hyde of Marlborough, Lord Chief Justice) "thought fit to send him into the country to Pirton in North Wiltshire whither his father" (Henry Hyde who married Mary Langford of Trowbridge) "had removed himself from Dinton" (where the Chancellor was born,

"This is a very faire Church, sometime doubtless a place of great devotion, as appeares by those many niches in the walles within and without to sett images in, &c. At the East end of the Chancell without are two Angells holding some kind of vegetative between them, which I suppose to be either a laurel or olive branch.

All the windowes in the Chancell are seminated all over with estoilles or starres of 6 points.

On the North side of the Altar, in the wall, is an old marble tombe, but the 1608:) "choosing rather to live upon his own land, the which he had purchased many years before, and to rent Dinton, which was but a lease for lives, to a Tenant." It was also at this house at Pyrton that, he says, whilst he was reading to his father in Camden's Annals, in Latin, the particular passage relating to a certain John Felton who had fixed the Pope's Bull against the Bishop of London's palace gate, a person of the neighbourhood knocked at the door and told them that a post had just gone through the village to Charlton, the Earl of Berkshire's, to inform the Earl that the Duke of Buckingham was killed the day before by another John Felton. His two elder brothers dying, the Chancellor succeeded to this property. He married for his first wife Anne daughter of Sir George Ayliffe of Grittenham House in the adjoining parish of Brinkworth. She died in the first year of marriage, 2nd. July 1632 aged 20. Ashmole [Berks. I. 2.] mentions her monument, with portraiture of herself and an infant, in Purley Church, Berks: with this inscription: "Vale anima candidissima! Vale mariti tui quem dolore et luctu conficis, æternum desiderium! Vale fœminarum decus et sæculi ornamentum!" The Clarendon property now belongs to Worcester College.

The two coats of arms, mentioned by Aubrey as in the church windows, were those of the KEYNES and PAYNELL families, who in 1274 were landowners under Malmesbury Abbey. The former were Hereditary Keepers of Braden Forest. "Keynes's Place, or Court" came in 1376 to Wentiliana sister and heiress of Sir John Keynes, Knight. In 1413 it was Sir William Brantingham's. [See also Hutchins Dorset, I. 127.] "Paynell's," shortened into "'Nele's-Place," passed by an heiress Margery Paynell, to John Ponger, or Poucher, 1349. The Earls of Sarum, and of Lancaster, had some ancient interest in the parish, and among owners in temp. Edw. III. and IV. are the names, of Aylmer, Walrond, Russell, and the Lord St. Amand. In 1565 Robert Shermore. About temp. Elizabeth the family of Digges from Kent settled here: their descendants at Marlborough. In Charles I. and II. Nevil Maskelyne. The Astronomer Royal of that name was buried here in 1811. Lord Clive of Plassy, the celebrated Indian General who died 1774, married Margaret daughter of Edmund Maskelyne Esq. of Purton. Anthony Goddard was of Purton 1737. In 1472 some land here maintained a chantry in Ramsbury church: and there was also a payment of rent to Maiden Bradley Priory. In the "Archæologia," vol. XXXVII. p. 304 there is a carefully drawn Map, and an Article on the ancient bounds of Braden Forest, by J. Y. Akerman Esq.

The Church, St. Mary's, but called St. Nicholas in a Fine of 9. Edw. III., has two towers, on one of which is a spire. The words "Johannes Passus" (John in Martyrdom) perhaps refer to some stained glass representation of the execution of St. John.

Inscription with coates of armes being in brasse, on purpose to perpetuate the memories of the dead, gave occasion to sacrilegious hands to teare them away.

In this Church have been very fine paynted glasse, but now so broken and mangled, that there is little to be recovered.

In a crosse Aile, on the South side, in the third column of the East windowe is this coate: [No. 225, KEYNES.] In the South windowe, in the same Aile, are severall Inscriptions, with severall Bishops with their Mitres and Crosiers.

This coate, [No. 226, PAYNELL] is in the last windowe on the South side of the Church, and this inscription has been shuffled, I know not how, by the glazier, into the first columnne of the same window: "Johannes Passus."

In this parish was the Chancellor Hyde's habitation when a private gentleman, before the civill warres."

From Mr. R. Browne.

"In the Chancell, on the South side of the Altar, is a monument erected to William Holcroft, Gent. He was buried about forty years since, or thereabout. This was Dr. Whistler's wife's father, viz. Alderman Lowther's Relict.

"In the name of God, Amen. Here lyeth the body of WILLIAM HOLCROFT the sonne of Thomas Holcroft and Margery Sandis his wife, the youngest daughter of the Lord Thomas Sandis; the sayd William Holcroft at the time of making this his monument, had to wife Dorothy Bedingfield, the daughter of Thomas Bedingfield, of Bedingfield, in the county of Suffolke, Esquire, and by her had five children, namely Thomas and William Holcroft, Elizabeth, Dorothy, and Mary Holcroft, for whom hee prayed God to bless them, saying, Christ is to mee life; death is to mee advantage. In an Aisle adjoining to the Chancell, now belonging to Edward Webb, Esqr., this coate, in the third columnne of the second windowe, [No. 231.]

In the second columnne of the same windowe a pigge salient, with a bell about his neck, [No. 232], respecting a man at his beads, now broken: I presume he was Saint Anthony. In the limbe (edge) of the window: Anno Dni. millesimo...

These letters are in the first columnne of the 3rd windowe; in a circle I.P.C. [No. 233], and stand, I suppose for I.H.C, i.e. JESUS: how the P should come in there I know not. In the limb is Orate Benefactoribus. In this windowe this escutcheon; [No. 234, RICHMOND alias WEBB].

In the limb of the 3rd window, on the north side of the Church,

Pray for the welth of William for the welth of Thomas Sawyer and Caterne.

The Vicaridge howse is very ancient, and, as I have often heard the reverend late deceased Vicar say, was an itinerating-house to the Monastery of Hales in Gloucestershire.”¹

In 1587 the chief estate belonged to Edmund Richmond alias Webb, whose mother was heir of Anthony Pulleyne, of this place. [Wilts Visit. 1623 “Richmond.”] It still belonged to the Webbs in Aubrey’s time. Wotton, and Yorke, are names found here in Edw. IV.

At Haydon, Haydon-wick, and Morden in this parish occur the names of owners, viz., Sanford 1202, Tregoz 1298, Aylmer 1361, Le Warr 1370, St. Omer 1404, Wrofton (Wroughton) 1408, Fitzwaryn and Montacute 1414, Nevill, Earl of Abergavenny, 1476.

Thomas Rodbourne, Warden of Merton College, Oxon., and builder of the fine tower there, afterwards Bishop of St. David’s, who died about 1442, is said by A. Wood to have been a native of this parish. [Chalmers’s Biographical Dictionary, “Rudborne.”]

Mr. Nicholas Adey, Vicar 1670—1713, published in 1682 a Visitation sermon preached that year at Cricklade from Luke xx. 14, called “A Plot for a Crown”: in which he applied the parable of the Husbandmen who cast out the Heir in order to seize his inheritance, to the case of the rightful Prince and the excluders in Parliament. The times being “nice,” he was obliged to clear himself by a Preface.

In shield No. 231 the sinister may possibly refer to the Sawyer family, whose name is SEVENHAMPTON, not far from Highworth.

In an old, and very faire and gilt and painted MS. in folio on velam, which was the Missale in the hands of Mr. Hood, Pastor of Coulsdon in Com. Surrey, which heretofore belonged to this place, I find written as followeth:

[Appendix No. xxxviii.] Extract from a Latin Deed in which one of the Warneford Family 'Confirms to God and the Chapel of St. James of Sevenhampton, and to Elias there, a house, and land which WARN. . . . my father, of good memory, gave to found a Daily Mass for his soul, with Dirige and Placebo, &c. Witnessed by John Fitz Piers, Robert de Waltham, Roger Foliott, Peter Jordan, Chaplain, and others.'¹

"9. Aug. The Obit of John Warneford, A.D. 1393."

In the same Kalendar:

"21. July. St. Praxedes Virgo. The Obit of Margery Ryvers, Lady of Sevenhampton, who ordained and made the Prebendary and Prebend of Heyworth." No year of the Lord.²

mentioned in Aubrey's text as in an inscription on the church windows. Burke's Armory gives for Sawyer "a fess between three sea-pies;" but for Sayer, a kindred name, "a chevron between three sea-gulls," as in the shield No. 231.

² Sevenhampton (in Anglo Saxon, Seofen-hám-tun, the enclosure of seven farms), commonly called Sennington, is a hamlet of Highworth. It was of the Lordship of William de Ewe at the Norman Survey. In Hen. III. an estate here was held under the Crown by Margery de Ripariis, or de Ryvers, of Tormarton, co. Gloucester, who, according to the memorandum preserved by Aubrey, founded the valuable Prebend of Highworth, in the Cathedral of Salisbury.

The Manor belonged in 1262 to Baldwin de Redvers, or de Insulâ, Eighth and last Earl of Devon of that name: whose heir was his sister Isabella widow of William de Fortibus Earl of Albemarle. She was Hereditary Chamberlain in Fee of the Exchequer, which office, together with this Manor, and the "hamlets of Highworth, Stratton and Cricklade" she granted by Deed to Adam de Stratton, Clerk, for which he did homage and obtained confirmation from the Crown. (Madox). For some offence he was imprisoned, and his estate, of which 926 acres were in demesne, was seized by the Crown. It was assigned as dower to Margaret Queen of England widow of Edw. I.

In 6. Edw. II. (1312) the King's tenants at Sevenhampton, Stratton and Highworth complained that though they were not of Ancient Demesne of the Crown and were not wont to be tallaged (taxed for the King's aid) in times past, but had paid their common charges and prestations like the rest of the Towns, yet nevertheless the King's officers had charged them with tallage as if they had been of Ancient Demesne. Search was made in Domesday Book. Sevenhampton was found to have belonged to William de Ow, and Stratton to Nigel the Physician. About Highworth they could find nothing either in Domesday or other records. They were accordingly adjudged to be discharged of tallage. There is a long Deed relating to this matter in “Madox's Firma Burgi.” p. 6. note. Afterwards these manors were dower of Isabel, widow of Edw. II. In 1378 the Duke of Brittany had surrendered the town of Brest to the King of England until the war should be ended, on condition of having a large sum of money, and a Castle and Manor assigned him in England. Castle Rising in Norfolk was the one chosen, and with it the Manor of Sevenhampton and Hundred of Highworth, which he held until the restoration of Brest in 1396. (Fœdera.) Henry VII. settled the three manors abovementioned as jointure on his Queen. Among ancient landholders in the reigns of the Edwards were the Abbess of Godstowe, William Aylmer, Clinton Earl of Huntingdon, and Sir Robert Knolles. Certain lands belonging to Elizabeth St. Omer (of Britford) who married 1st. Richard Horne and 3rd. John Syward were sold by her daughter and heiress Joan Atte More to Walter Lord Hungerford in 1435.

The Warnefords of Warneford Place in Sevenhampton, according to the old Kalendars quoted by Aubrey, were here so early as 1393. John Warneford was Sheriff of Wilts 1589. Sir Edmund 1683. They were supporters of the Parliament in the Civil Wars. The South East chapel in Highworth Church belongs to this family. Dr. Samuel Wilson Warneford, Rector of Lydiard Millicent, Wilts, eldest son of Rev. Francis Warneford and Catharine Calverley, who died January 1855 aged 92, endowed the Queen's College and the Queen's Hospital, Birmingham, with £29,500: and was a most munificent benefactor during lifetime to various societies and charities. A memoir of him, printed for private circulation, was written by the Rev. Vaughan Thomas B.D. of C. C. College, Oxon.

In the church-yard is a tombe-stone with Inscription of Coldwell, son of Bishop Coldwell of Salisbury, who was a tradesman in London, and broke and became a Steward in this family.¹

STRATTON ST. MARGARET.

¹ Somerford Keynes is in Cricklade Hundred. In the Monasticon is a grant [Malmsbury No. VI.] to Bishop Aldhelm of "40 cassates of land on the East side of the River Thames near the Ford called Summerforde": these are also mentioned in Domesday Book as belonging to the Abbey: and Moffat (Hist. of Malms. 181) places them at Somerford Keynes. It certainly lies nearer to the Thames than either of the other Somerfords, but in the list of the Malmsbury Abbey estates at the Dissolution there is no mention of property of that extent at any place called Somerford. At that time the Abbey had only a trifling payment of 3s. 4d. from Little Somerford, and 1s. for Angrove.

Hutchins (Dorset I. 110.) says that Ralph de Kaynes (son of a Norman Ralph de Caineto) had the manor of Somerford given to him by King Henry I. in marriage with the daughter of Hugh Maminot a Baron in Kent. His grandson Ralph forfeited the estate by joining the barons in rebellion against King John. In Edw. I. Hugh Paynell held Somerford under William de Kaynes. In 1280 Robert de Kaynes died seised of this estate, of Chelworth, the custody of Braden Forest, part of Ashton Keynes and Purton and Colcote manors. Somerford was held in 1316 by the favourite Despenser: in 1354 by William Clinton, Earl of Huntingdon: and in 1361 by Sir Theobald Mounteney of Minchinhampton co. Gloucester. In 1365 the Manor and Advowson were granted by Edw. III. to his daughter Isabella on her marriage with Ingelram de Courcy. In 1400 to Edmund Duke of York. Hen. VII. settled them in jointure. They were purchased from the Crown in Philip and Mary by Robert Strange: whose last male representative, Robert, died (see inscription above) in 1654, æt. 23. His fine monument is in the North aisle. By one of his sisters and coheireses the property passed to the Foyles of Hampshire. The three sisters were Mrs. Margaret Foyle, Mrs. Southby of Carswell, and Jane, Lady Jocelyn. The young man's mother was Jane, sister of Sir Edward Hungerford of Farleigh and Corsham, and daughter of Sir Anthony Hungerford of Down Ampney.

The church has some masonry which is considered to be Saxon. In the North wall is a very ancient outside-door: there is an hour-glass by the pulpit, and a painting of St. Christopher on the wall. The old manor house is standing. Geo. Soley Foyle and J. Pitt Esqrs. were joint Lords of the Manor in 1805.

Here is likewise a tradition that this was a Market-towne in the time of the Saxons.

Merton, Bishop of Rochester and Founder of Merton College in Oxford, had once the cure of soules here; he afterwards purchased the mannour and gave it to his college."²

* Q. If she stands on a Dragon?

¹ There was a family of Kemble of Stratton 1565 and 1660.

² Walter Rodbourn, Rudborn, or De Merton (see above p. 157) who was in Holy Orders so early as 1237, is said to have been Rector here. He gave the Advowson, and lands, to his College, and endowed a Vicarage. The College obtained a fair and market 26 Hen. VI. (1447.) The Abbey of Turon, or Tirron, had a pension from Stratton in 1291. An Alien Priory here was confiscated and its property given by Hen. VI. to King's Coll. Cambridge.

Stratton is in Cricklade Hundred. The name is a corruption of Street-town, from a Roman street which passed through it. The entire parish was held at the Conquest by Nigel, the King's Physician. In Edw. I. there were four properties held under the Braose family, as of their Honour of Kington co. Hereford, by Gardun, De la Folye, Feonay, and Le Bret. Besides these were other owners, Walerand of Blountesdon, free of service; Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and Margery Ryvers who held under the Crown; and Baldwin de Insulâ, whose estate seems to have descended in the same course as that held by him at Sevenhampton. In 1316 Margaret, Queen of England, had both the Strattons in dower. In 1363 Humphrey de Bohun had the manor of Stratton St. Margaret. On the partition of the Bohun estates in 1421 between King Hen. V. and his cousin the Lady Anne Plantagenet then Countess of Stafford, Stratton fell to the latter. In 1414 it had been held by her husband's nephew Humphrey Stafford, Duke of Buckingham. In 1445 the "grange within the King's manor at Margrete Stratton" is described as "roofless and the thatch rotten." In 1544 there was a grant to Sir Thomas Brydges. Chelrey, Bonville and Orgoyle were also ancient names here. In 10 Rich. I. a virgate of land was held by the service of attending the army with a horse to carry the lord's clothes. Some of the land belonging to Margery Ryvers and Le Bret above mentioned, afterwards belonged to a family of Espringham, by whom they were sold to Burton, and from his representatives were purchased in 1439 by Lord Hungerford who gave them to his younger son Sir Edmund, of Down Ampney.

Gough speaks of the Font in Stratton Church as of c. 1280. [Sep: Mon: ii. p. 1. Tab. 8.] By Order in Council 1852 the Vicarage was transferred from the patronage of the Bishop of Salisbury to that of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol.

² The Boundaries of "Ceosel-den" are given in Codex Dipl. No. 730. They mention Holcombe, A stone cist, and Blackman's barrow, as ancient places of interment. Ceosel is Anglo-Saxon for gravel or sand, (hence the "Chesil-bank,") and dene, vale or plain. "Chesel-dene" is reckoned in Domesday Book among the manors of the Abbey of St. Peter of Westminster: but in 1316 it belonged to the Abbey of Hyde near Winchester. A small portion was held (Edw. I.) by the Folioths under the Honour of Wallingford. In Hen. IV. Wroughton, and Roche, had some interest here. The Abbot of Hyde had the great Tithes and presented to the Rectory. The Rector presented to the Vicarage. At the Dissolution Sir Thomas Brydges of Keynsham purchased the Manor and Advowson. Between 1581 and 1616 it was bought by — Stephens. Of this family there is a short pedigree in Wilts Visit. 1623. The effigy on brass of Francis Rutland, who married Mary Stephens and died in one of Queen Elizabeth's Progresses, together with a Pedigree of his family from the Herald's Visit. of Surrey A.D. 1623 (Harl. MS. 1561) is given in Kite's Wiltshire Brasses, p. 73. The next and present owners, by purchase, were the Calley family. The arms on the escutcheon mentioned in the text were those of William Calley Esq. and his wife Anne daughter and coheir of William Bower of Fiddington in West Lavington. Mr. Calley was involved in trouble by his opposition to the Royal cause in the Civil Wars, and hence for a long time was traditionally believed to have been the "Will: Cawley" whose signature was affixed to the Warrant for King Charles's execution. But Mr. Waylen in his History of Marlborough p. 248 has shown that the real Regicide was of quite a different family. That person was of Chichester, and was buried at Vevay in Switzerland in 1666.

BURDROP is properly Bury-thorp. Thorp is a Danish word for village: and in Denmark is often corrupted into "trup" or "drup," as Norup for North-thorp, Möldrup for Mill-thorp. Burdrop belonged to Hyde Abbey, to which it was given 34 Edw. I. partly by Agnes de Cardeville, her grant being dated at Cardeville-wyke. Sir Thomas Brydges at the Dissolution, and Stephens, were successive owners. Now, Mr. Calley. In the Cartulary of Hyde Abbey (Harl. MS. No. 1761, pp. 104, 109) are many deeds relating to Chiselden, Hoddesden and Burithorp: including a "Consuetudinarium de Chiselden." The Arms of Calley of Burdrop are the same as those of Caley of Yorkshire.

The Manor of BADBURY was given by King Edred to Abbot Dunstan of Glastonbury, A.D. 955. The Charter, printed in New. Mon. I. 51, contains the Anglo-Saxon boundaries, in which mention is made of "The Ten Stones." During the great dispute with the Abbey, the Manor was assigned to the Bishop of Bath from 1204 to 1218, when it reverted to Glastonbury. Folyot held under the Monks in Edw. I. Aubrey names Redfern as an owner after the Dissolution.

Hodson in this parish was formerly spelled "Horderes-ton, or Hoddesdon." It also belonged to Hyde Abbey. In Hen. VI. John Wroughton had some lands both here and at Burithorp.

² Clive (Clivus, brow of a hill) frequently occurs as a local name in Wiltshire records. The two most common (surnamed from respective owners) are Cliff-Pipard, and Cliff-Wancy (now Clevancy. See "HILMERTON.") Among the many "Clives" in Domesday Book, this is identified as one of the estates of Gilbert de Breteville, by part of his territory being there called Tornelle (i.e. Thornhill in this parish.) De Breteville's estates afterwards formed part of the Fee of Bigod, Earl Marshal. Under him they were held by the family of Columbars: under them by the Pipards. This Norman name is found in co. Somerset, Gloucester, Devon, and Oxon. (At Freshford near Bath it is corrupted into "Pipe-house.") At Cold Ashton co. Gloucester their manor passed to Boteler, Earl of Ormond. The heiress of the Devonshire Pipards married Warin de L'isle; her shield, A. 3 bars gemelles az. Leland mentions the Pipards of Hasely co. Oxon. as men of fair possessions whose heiress married Lenthal. [Itin. II. p. 35.] Of the Wilts branch there are a few local notices. Roger Pipard was the King's Coroner 1274. Robert was of Fittleton 1278. William was Forester of Savernake 1281. Isabella, in 1291 gave Mackington (Mannington) manor in this neighbourhood to Lacock Abbey. Giles was of Salthrop. A Philip Pipard of Cliff, was Rector of Trowbridge so late as 1347.

The Columbars family was a collateral branch of the Barons Columbars, extinct in 1342. In temp. John they had Pipard's Cliff, Binknoll, Broad Hinton, and Chisbury near Bedwyn. In Hen. III. Michael Columbars married Joan daughter of John Cobham C.J.: and issue male failing, about 1284 he disposed of most of his estates to his father-in-law. Henry, son of the C.J. and first Baron Cobham, gave Cliff Pipard to his second son Thomas Cobham in 1306. He bore 3 lions on the chevron of the Cobham shield, but Henry his son (1308) 3 crescents. In 1525 the manor was sold to William Dauntsey, Alderman of London, Founder of the West Lavington "Dauntsey School and Almshouse." By him, 26 April 1530, it was transferred to John Goddard, Gent. of Aldbourne, ancestor of the present owner Horatio Nelson Goddard Esq. Other names connected with Cliff Pipard are, in Hen. III., Ralph Lovel, holding under Castle Combe Barony: in 1296 William St. Maur: in 1368 Robert De L'isle: in 1476 John and Isabella Latton: in 1535 Henry Brounker.

The Rectory belonged to the Cobhams: and the Rector appointed a Vicar. About 1398 the Advowson was severed from the Manor and given by John de Maydenhith, (called in Wilts. Inst. p. 87. "Dean of Cirencester,") to Lacock Abbey, where an Obit was kept for him. The Abbess presented to the Vicarage until the Dissolution. John Goddard (above-mentioned) of Albourne, had also a grant from the Crown in 1541 of the Rectory and presentation to the Vicarage, late belonging to Lacock Abbey: together with lands in Wanborough, Upham, Wiclescote, Wroughton, &c. The Rectory appears to have been leased out for years: the lessee appointing the Vicar. The remainder of a lease was re-purchased by the Goddards, and their first Presentation was in 1660. Henry Blake was ejected for Nonconformity in 1662.

The Church (St. Peter's) is Perpendicular; with early English features in the Chancel. It is traditionally said to have been built by one of the Cobhams, to whom is attributed the cross-legged effigy (not of free-stone, but of a hard chalk) in the wall, N. E. corner of N. aisle. The Chancel was re-built in 1860 by H. N. Goddard Esq. Some of the stained glass was left in 1710, about which time also some large free-stone coffins were dug up in the church yard. In digging graves at the present time, ashes are frequently met with, mixed with dark rich earth at considerable depth, though the soil of the parish generally is of no great thickness above the chalk. In the green sand of

In the North Aisle is an old Gothique freestone monument, with the figure of a man incumbent, which they say is the monument of the Lord Cobham, who they say died in one of the grounds here. He built this church.

In the South Aisle is a fair marble gravestone with a Knight-like effigies in brasse, but the Inscription is lost; it is the gravestone of Quintin, of Bupton, in this parish. Here is only a poor boy now left of the name and family.¹

Cliff great quantities of fossil coprolite have been found. On 22 September 1856 a violent tornado, appearing to descend perpendicularly, crushed and wrenched up a great number of noble trees in the grounds of Mr. Goddard at the Manor House. Bacon's Liber Regis mentions "Corton Chapel (destroyed,) annexed to Cliff Pipard": but this would seem to have been in Hilmerton.

BROAD TOWN was anciently held, by Edmund Earl of Cornwall (1299), and Philip Basset, under the Honour of Wallingford: by the families of Bernard, and Parys (whose tenement was called Parys Place), under the Earl Marshal, and then under the Mortimers. The Manor belonged to the Crown in 1400, Edmund Duke of York 1415, Beauchamp Earl of Warwick 1446: George Duke of Clarence jure uxoris, 1478. In 28 Hen. VIII. (1536) the manor was granted to Sir Edward Seymour, Viscount Beauchamp, afterwards the Protector Duke of Somerset.

Broad Town now supplies the funds for a General Charity to the county of Wilts. By her will dated 17 May 1686, Sarah, Duchess Dowager of Somerset, ordained that the rents and profits of an estate at Cotmarsh in Broad Hinton, and of her manor of Broad Town, should be applied to apprenticing poor boys; those born within her manors of Broad Town, Thornhill, Froxfield, Wotton Rivers and Huish, having the preference: in default, from the county at large. Her Grace was the youngest daughter and coheir of Sir Edward Alston, of co. Bedford: and was married: 1st, to George, son of Sir Harbottle Grimston; 2nd, John Seymour fourth Duke of Somerset, (great great-grandson of the Protector Somerset) who died S. P. 1675; 3rd, it is believed, to Henry Hare, Lord Coleraine. The license for this marriage issued 17th July, 1682, her Grace being then about 40 years of age. She died 26 October 1692, and was buried in Westminster Abbey. These estates came to her, as survivor, under a settlement made in 1671, after her marriage with the Duke of Somerset. She was also the munificent Foundress of the Froxfield Almshouse.

Near the North boundary of Broad Town Fields, some years ago were discovered a few large skeletons, lying with their feet towards the East: near one of them, the iron head of an arrow. Roman remains are said to have been found on a spot contiguous.

¹ BUPTON (properly Bubbe-ton) is in the Hundred of Potterne, the reason probably being that the Bishop of Sarum was chief lord of both. In Hen. III. William Quintin held one Knight's Fee in "Clive" (late Muleple's) under the Bishop, (T. de N.): and William Bubbe a portion of one, by service of Ward at Devises Castle. The Quintins also held land at Ramsbury, under the Bishop: and Woodhill in this parish, (now Mr. Broome's), under Bigod, Earl Marshal. Their old residence at Bupton is now an ordinary farm house. In "Wilts Visit." 1623 is a pedigree, showing their intermarriages with Long of Draycote, Ivy of West Kington, &c.: their Arms, Erm. on a chief Gules, 3 lions ramp. Or. Brasses," p. 53, as "probably a Cobham of c. 1380," is called by Aubrey with more probability, a Quintin. Bupton also once belonged to the St. Vincent family. In 1860 it was sold by Sir Richard Simeon, Bart., to Mr. Richard Stratton. In 1346 William de Beauver had land here: in 23 Edw. III. Edmund Stokes: in 1587 Gabriel Pile: in 1635 Sir Francis Pile, at Lower Bupton. In 1682 Thomas Goddard disposed of his part of Bupton to that family. Sir Seymour Pile 1699. There was a grant here in Philip and Mary to — Dismars.

² BUSHTON. This is a corruption of Bishop-ton. At the Conquest it was held, with Thornhill, of the Bishop of Winchester by the Prior of St. Swithin's in that city. At the Dissolution a lease was granted by the Crown to John Warneford Esq. In 22 Elizabeth there was a grant to William Webb. The family of Hunton was of East Knoyle, [Mere 186]. For their pedigree, see "Wilts Visit." 1623. In 1669 a farm at Bushton was settled on the marriage of Sir Francis Holles son and heir of Denzill Lord Holles, with Anne one of three coheirs of Sir Francis Pile. In 1743 it was sold by Thomas Holles, Duke of Newcastle, to John Walker Esq. of Lyneham. Thence it passed with Mr. Walker's other estates to G. H. W. Heneage Esq. of Compton Bassett, and was sold about 1854 to the Rev. G. A. Goddard. The late Mr. Wayte of Highlands, Calne, was owner of some lands. William Spackman was of Bushton temp. Charles II. One of this family, Thomas Spackman of Kimbolton co. Huntingdon, endowed the Charity School at THORNHILL in Cliff Parish. He was buried at Cliff Pipard October 29, 1785, aged 76. At Thornhill, an estate which belonged in Hen. III. to the Priory of Monkton Farley, was granted at the Dissolution to the Protector Somerset. Brasenose Coll. Oxon. has now five farms here; some of them being leased to H. N. Goddard Esq. BARN-HILL in the parish of Cliff is perhaps a relic of the name of Barnevil, or Bernevall (now the Irish family of Barnwell), who were owners here in Hen. III.

Mem. The Chapelry of Bircingknoll, alias Binknoll, alias Binoll, in this parish, belonged, as Mr. Brunsdon thinks, to the Nunnery of St. Margaret's juxta Marleborough.¹

The windowes of this Church have been very good. In the North Aisle is a niche for a monument, but sans inscription, or tradition of the clark's wife.

¹ BINKNOLL is now in Broad Hinton. It belonged to the Cobhams. The chapel is mentioned in Pope Nicholas's Taxatio (A.D. 1291) as a Rectory belonging to the Priory of St. Denis, Southampton. It is likewise named in "Non. Inq." A.D. 1340. Here also are some remains of an Earthwork nearly triangular intersected by a vallum and foss: and a curious well. WOODHILL Chapel, in 3 Edw. I. (1274) was a Rectory belonging to the Prioress of Ambresbury. [Non. Inq.]

In Edw. I., under Bigod, Earl Marshal, Hilmerton was held by the families of Wancy of Cliff-Wancy (now Cleveney), and Bluet (also of Lackham), who obtained a Fair. In 1380 Peter de Cusaunce, jure uxoris. In Hen. IV. and V., the Baynards of Lackham. In 1600 William Sadler, also of Wroughton. Soon afterwards the Jacob family.

About 1670 the principal estate belonged to the Norbornes; [see "CALNE."] A coheiress of Norborne married Mr. Berkeley of Stoke near Bristol. Their son Norborne Berkeley recovered the ancient Barony of Botetourt which was in abeyance. By the heiress of Berkeley of Stoke, Hilmerton came to Charles, fourth Duke of Beaufort. By that family it was sold in 1803. In 1813 it was purchased from Colonel Ainslie by Thomas Poynder Esq. whose grandson Thomas Henry Allen Poynder Esq. of Hartham Park is now the proprietor.

At WINCOMBE in this parish ancient owners were, in Edw. I. to Hen. IV., Spilman of Coulsfield-Spilman in South Wilts, and in Hen. IV., William Wroughton. There was a chantry chapel at

"Cineres GULIELMI QUINTYN Armigeri, et MARGARETÆ uxoris suæ, hoc Ambulatorio juxta hunc locum humatæ sunt. Ille nono die Octobris, An. Dni. 1652; Ipsa decimo die Maij, An. 1647; e vivis emigrabant, sed die novissimâ consurgunt."¹

Wydecombe, in the gift A.D. 1332 of John de Langford, then owner of that estate.

GODACRE (now Goatacre) belonged in Edw. I. and III. to Barneville, and Bluet: in 12 Hen. IV. to Roche. Mr. Poynder is now owner.

CORTON (properly Corston) belonged before Edw. II. to Fitz Elys of Waterperry co. Oxon., and was held under the Honour of Gloucester. By Fitz Elys it was sold in 1324 to Sir John Russell of Bradenstoke and of Bradfield in Hullavington. The Rectory of a Free Chapel once at Corton was sold by the heiress of Russell, widow of Quatermayn, to Walter Lord Hungerford in 1434; by whom the profits were annexed to the chantry of St. Mary in Heytesbury Church. Some lands at Corton were sold by the Russells to Walter Boteler of Sheningford 43 Edw. III. In 1438 Thomas Danvers held "late Quatermayne's."

LITTLECOTE (in this parish) belonged to the Bluets in 1316. In 1857 it was sold as part of the estates of the late Lady Neale.

HIGHWAY originally belonged (as above stated) to Malmsbury Abbey; but by a Composition mentioned (under "BREMILL,") was surrendered in 1220 to the Bishop of Sarum; and so became part of the Hundred of Cannings. William Horton held it under the See in Edw. I.: and in 22 Edw. IV., Robert Strenshaw. It is now the property of Mr. Tonge.

The Patronage of Hilmerton Church was in the Bluets A.D. 1217. Then, and for many years, the clerk, who was Rector, used to nominate another clerk Vicar. In 1292 the Priory of Ewyas Harold on the borders of Herefordshire received a yearly payment of £2 out of the tithes. In 1393 the Advowson was given to the Abbey of Bustlesham, or Bysham-Montagu, co. Berks. For some particulars relating to the Advowson, see under that Abbey, in the New Monasticon. Since the Dissolution the Crown has been Patron of the Vicarage. From 1662 to 1680, when he resigned, Lancelot Addison, father of Mr. Secretary Addison author of the "Spectator," was Vicar of Hilmerton. He also held the Rectory of Milston near Ambresbury from 1670.

² This brass has disappeared. The name of Vicar Wylykys does not appear in the Institutions to Hilmerton.

CLEVANCY.³ (In Hilmerton.)

Mem. In the Legier Booke of the muniments of the great Earle of March, in the custody of Sir Edward Harley, Knight of the Bath, viz. of all his estate in England, Wales, and Ireland, I find thus: "Endenture entre Margarete de Mortimer et Roger de Mortimer son fitz de certaines terres livrées a dite dame en dower," and amongst a great many others, "des tenements que dame Elizabet de Penebrugge et Johan son fitz tiegnent en Clyve-Wauncy."

² The Church is dedicated to St. Lawrence. It was restored a few years ago (1840) at the expense of the late Thomas Poynder Esq. The Registers commence 1645.

³ Properly Cliff Wancy: so called from William and Godfrey de Wancy, Knights, owners temp. Hen. III. and Edw. I, under the Fee of the Earl Marshal. The Wancy family is also traced in Suffolk and Northamptonshire. Some part of this tything belonged at the same time to one Hugh de Doddeford (holding under Tregoz, as of the Honour of Ewyas). This portion was sold to Sir Roger Fitz Elys of Corton adjoining, and of Waterperry, co. Oxon: and again in 18. Edw. II. to Sir John Russell of Bradenstoke, Kt. His descendant Johanna Russell widow first of Quatremain, second, of Crede, sold it 1434 to Walter Lord Hungerford.

In 1280 Roger Mortimer held this manor, (mis-spelled in the Testa de Nevil, "CheneWaunte.") In 1282 Edmund Mortimer was of "Clyve Wancy;" the robbery of his goods is mentioned in a Fine of that date. According to Aubrey's extract (above), the Pembridge family held under them. In 1316 John Pedewardyn was a landowner. In 1331 Gilbert de Berwick. In 1476 Edward Nevill, Earl of Bergavenny. In 1482 Robert Stranshaw. Bradenstoke Priory had some rents: and in 1534 Magdalen College, Oxon, a farm (Val. Ecc.) The Glanvilles of Broad Henton, or a branch of them, were at one time owners.

LYDIARD EWYAS or TREGOZ.

This place is so called to contra-distinguish it from the other neighbouring Lydiard, called Lydiard Milsent or North Lydiard. Whatever the etymologie is, it is obvious enough it received its agnomen from Ewyas, and Tregoz, who successively enjoyed it. One Ewyas had this place at the conquest. From Ewyas to (Tregoz, then to Grandison, then to) Pateshull, (Beauchamp, and St. John.) It is now the seat of the Worshipfull familie of the Saint Johns, who are descended in a direct line from them both, as you will find in those verses beneath the Painting of their Pedigree.¹

¹ Lydiard Tregoz, or South Lydiard, is in the old Hundred of Blackgrove, now included in Kingsbridge. The name occurs in a multitude of forms: as, Lydeyerd, Lidegherd, Lideyert, Lidiarde, Lydyarde, Lydeyarde, Lidyard, Ledyerd, Lydeard, Liddiard, Ladyhart, Lidyhart and Lediard. The derivation is Anglo-Saxon; from Leod, people, and geard, enclosure. The name of Ewyas is that of a Herefordshire family under whose Barony of Harold Ewyas were held in Wilts, Lydiard, Teffont Ewyas, Upton Scudamore, Somerford Ewyas, and others.

The Tregoz family were of Norfolk and Essex, until a Sir Robert became the head of its most important branch by marriage with Sibilla the wealthy heiress of Robert, Lord Ewyas. Though this Lady was duly married a strange contest arose concerning her in the 11th year of King John. One William de Newmarket (Newmarche) claimed her: but as no less a person than King Richard I. had bestowed her in marriage upon Tregoz, the Royal gift was not to be disturbed, and the plaintiff Newmarch was, in more senses than one, non-suited. She afterwards married Roger de Clifford. Her second son John Tregoz had license from the Crown in 1269 to enclose Shortgrove Wood in Braden Forest. His elder brother, Robert, was created Baron Tregoz of Lydiard. His son, John, second Baron, resided in Devizes Castle. He left (1299) two daughters, coheiresses, Clarissa, wife of La Warre who succeeded to the Ewyas Castle and Lordship; and Sibilla wife of William de Grandison, then of Exon Hill, co. Gloucester, on whom her father settled Lydiard. Other branches of the Tregoz family continued till temp. Hen. IV. (For a detailed account, see Topog. and Genealogist, Vol. ii. 124: and for Pedigree of Ewyas and Tregoz, Hoare's "Dunworth," 110.) Mabel, the heiress of Grandison, married John, Baron Pateshull; whose sister and coheiress Sibilla was the wife (4. Edw. III.) of Roger Beauchamp, Baron of Bletsho, co. Bedford, in which family Lydiard remained until the marriage of Margaret Beauchamp (afterwards Duchess of Somerset) with Oliver St. John (who died 1497) ancestor of the present owner, Lord Bolingbroke. The name of St. John is said to have been derived from their original Lordship of St. Jean near Rouen. The most remarkable members of the St. John family of Lydiard were, Oliver created Viscount Grandison, Baron Tregoz of Highworth, a statesman and Lord Deputy of Ireland under Charles I. and James I: (but he was a second son and never Lord of the manor): and Henry, Lord Bolingbroke, the opponent of Walpole and friend of

Here is but little that savours of venerable antiquity, but for modern monuments and ornaments, not unworthy the observation of a student in Heraldrie, it exceeds all the churches in this countie.¹

The Chancell, and the aisle of the St. Johns adjoining, are adorned with about

Pope. For more extended notices of the family, see Pedigree, &c., in Noble's "Cromwell," ii. 29. Manning and Bray's Surrey, iii. 330. Britton's Beaut. of Wilts, iii. 32. In the Chapter House, Westminster, is a Deed relating to the Manor and Church of Lydiard.

In the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 247, is a notice (taken from Rolls in Parl. II. 215) of a violent proceeding at Hook, in this parish, by Hugh Despenser of Fasterne, the favourite of Edw. II.: to compel a landowner there to give up his property. His hands were bound behind him and he was kept for a week in prison at Fasterne until he had quitclaimed his rights! In 1. Edw. III. Hook, and another property then called LYDIARD TYEYS, belonged to the Barons Tyeys. [See Ext. Peerage: in which their arms are described as Argent a chevron gules.] This family had also in 1322 Chilton and Draycot Foliot: and one of them was constable of Carisbrook Castle. Henry le Tyes was a follower (Valettus) of John St. John at the siege of Carlaverock. "Lydiard Tyeys" had passed to the Beauchamps, Earl of Warwick, in 7. Hen. IV.

At CHADINGTON the Prior of Bradenstoke held land under the Barony of Castle Combe. East Chadington was at one time called Chadington Bordeville, from an owner. The Montacutes, Earls of Sarum, also had some interest here.

STUDLEY GRANGE belonged to Stanley Abbey near Chippenham: and was charged with £6 13s. 4d. a year towards maintaining a chantry founded by William Ingram in Highworth Church.

MANINGDON. This (if it is the place meant by "Maghedon,") was of the Fee of Richard Earl of Cornwall 28. Edw. I.: as of the Honour of Wallingford. The Pipards made a gift here to Lacock Abbey. One third of an estate belonged to Lovell of Tichmarsh co. Northampton in Hen. IV. and Edw. IV. Another portion in 1329 to Isabella de Fortibus, Countess of Devon.

TOOT-HILL is a common name all over England. It has been thought (see Bowles's Bremhill, p. 50) that all hills of this name were mounds, on which (as at Silbury Hill, according to Mr. Bowles's theory) Mercury the favourite Deity of the ancient Britons was worshipped as Thoth, or Teut-ates.

¹ The gorgeous Monuments of the St. John Family in this Church had been only recently erected in Aubrey's time. A Memorial window to Mr. John King of Blagrove has lately been given, by his sisters the Misses King. It represents the Ascension of our Saviour. In a note by Mr. Dallaway to "Walpole's Anecdotes of Painters," IV. 187, it is mentioned that, when the furniture of Lydiard House was upon one occasion disposed of by auction, a bust of Lord Bolingbroke by Rysbrach was concealed by an old servant in a vault under the Church, from which in due season it was restored to light.

30 penons; over the altar doe hang two banners of St. George, two guidons (standards) of Ulster, and on each side a Mandilion (coat without sleeves) beautified with all their quarterings, with shield, sword, helmet, and crest, made in manner of a trophie, with gauntletts, gilt spurs, and such like badges of Equestrian dignitie.

In the East Windowe, first columnne.

Mem. that temp. (Edw. IV., Margaret) St. John, a daughter of this family was Lady Abbess of Shaftesbury Abbey.¹

Sir John St. John, 1594, and his Lady, Lucy Hungerford.

On the North side of the Altar are the pourtraictures as big as the life very well and curiously painted all at length, of Sir John St. John and his Lady, Lucy daughter and coheir to Sir Walter Hungerford. Also his sonne Sir John with his Lady, Ann, daughter of Sir Thos. Leighton, and their six daughters, who were all Ladyes. On the back i.e. the outside, of the doors, on which they are painted, is also the Pedigree of their family: which gett. Q. Mr. Thomas Gore of Alderton for it.²

[At the feet of the lady are represented the six daughters in mourning habits; and below them are depicted the arms of the St. John and Hungerford families, with the following inscription:

“Here lieth the body of SIR JOHN ST. JOHN, KNT., who married Lucy, daughter and coheire of Sir Walter Hungerford, of Farley, Knt., by whom he had issue Walter that died young, Sir John St. John, Knt. and Baronet, Oliver that died young, Katherine, Anne, Jane, Elinor, Barbara, Lucy, and Martha, that died a child. He deceased 20th Sept., 1594. She was secondly married to Sir Anthony Hungerford, Knt., by whom she had Edward,³ Bridget, and Jane, and then died the 4th June, 1598. This was erected by Sir John St. John, Knt. and Baronet, in the year 1615, the 20th of July.”]

Katharine married Sir Gyles Mompesson; Anne m. Sir George Ayliffe, of Gretenham, Jane m. Sir Arthur Attye, 2nd. Sir Charles Pleydell; Ellinor m. Sir William St. John co. Glamorgan; Barbara m. Sir Edward Villers; Lucy m. Sir Allen Apsley, Lieutenant of the Tower.¹

Under this Picture are verses.

[“ When conquering William won by force of sword
 The famous island now called Brittan’s land,
 Of Lydiard then was EwYAS only Lord,
 Whose heir to TREGOZ linckt in marriage band :
 That Tregoz, a great Baron in his age,
 By her had issue the Lord GRAUNTSON’s wife;
 Whose daughter PATSHULL took in marriage,
 And BEAUCHAMP theirs; which Beauchamp’s happy life,
 Was blessed with a daughter, whence did spring
 An heir to St. JOHN, who did Lydiard bring.
 Thus course of time, by God’s almighty power,
 Hath kept this land of Lydiard in one race
 Five hundred forty-nine years, and now more,
 Where at this day is St. John’s dwelling-place;
 Noe! noe! he dwells in heaven, whose anchored faith
 Fixed on God accounted life but death.”]

* Sir Giles was degraded. *Vide Chronicle temp. King James.*¹

¹ Sir Giles Mompesson was of the Bathampton-Wyly family (see Pedigree in Hoare's Heytesbury 219) and of Apshill in Tisbury (to which he bequeathed a small charity). The family name also belongs, in this county, to Seagry, Littleton Drew, Corton near Heytesbury (1667) and North Tidworth: to the last in connexion with the celebrated ghost story of the "Drumming boy." Sir Giles, M.P. for Great Bedwyn 1614—20, was a great projector, dealer, and patentee. He and a co-patentee, named Michel, abused the privilege of the exclusive manufacture of gold and silver thread, "by a new alchemistical way of making it with copper and other sophistical materials to cozen and deceive the people. And so poysonous were the drugs that made up this deceitful composition, that they rotted their heads and arms, and brought lameness upon those that wrought it, some losing their eyes, and many their lives, by the venom of the vapours that came from it. The clamours put forth were so great that the King was obliged to call in the Patent." The Parliament proceeded against Sir Giles in 1621. He was degraded from the order of Knighthood: fined £1000: to be considered an outlaw: his testimony not to be received in any court: to be imprisoned for life: disabled from holding any office, and to be ever held an infamous person. King James for this sentence, "it being so just and moderate," thanked the Lords: and added to it perpetual banishment. The truth is, according to Ruding, (Annals of Coinage, i. 377) that there was great abuse in patents at the time: that Sir Giles was made a scapegoat to bear all the blame, of which a great part properly belonged to the procurer of them, the Duke of Buckingham: and perhaps not a little to the grantor himself. Sir Giles Mompesson is considered to have been undoubtedly the prototype of the "Sir Giles Overreach" of Massinger (himself a native of Wiltshire). Mompesson's practices are pointedly alluded to in "The Bondsman," A. II. sc. 3. In 1639 out of his regard to Archbishop Laud he gave the Rectory of Codford St. Mary to St. John's College, Oxon.

to that of Queen Elizabeth, made by Sir John St. John in his lifetime, where he lies between his two wives: on his left hand his first, holding a child in her armes, in travaile of which shee died: on his right hand his second wife, with 5 sonnes kneeling at head, and 3 at feet, all under an arch supported at either end with four Corinthian pillars. On the chancell side of this Tombe lye four children, dead at the making of this Monument. At the top of the arch are the quarterings of St. John, scarcely visible by reason of the smallnesse and distance.

This Inscription is on the West end of this Monument: and, on a shield, ST. JOHN, impaling, 1st. [LEIGHTON, and 2nd. WHITMORE. No. 267].

The two following Inscriptions on the Chancell side of the same Tombe.²

² Above this tomb on the chancel side is a shield of 12 quarterings of the Hungerford Family: and on the Aisle side, another shield of 23 quarterings of the St. John Family.

¹ Benjamin Culme D.D. of Canonsleigh, son of Hugh Culme of Molland, co. Devon, was of Lincoln College, then of St. Alban's Hall, Oxon. He became Dean of St. Patrick's, Dublin, but being forced thence by the Rebellion in 1641 he returned to England, lived several years in a retired condition, and died at Midgehall in the family of his wife Deborah Pleydell. [Wood. Fast. Oxon.] His daughter Elizabeth was third wife of Sir John Morton, Baronet, of Milborne St. Andrew's. [Hutch. I. 480.]

² The Latin of this Inscription, if imperfect, cannot be corrected by reference to the original,

At a place in this parish, is a Well, the water whereof, as I am informed, was heretofore famous for curing many diseases, and working miracles, in the old time. The country people calle it "Antedochs-Well" perhaps instead of Antidote. I suppose here was the cell of some Anchorite.

In the gravell pitts, in the park by the bowling green, is found Lapis Judaicus, and great quantity of petrified shells; some like muscles.

MIDGEHALL (in Lydiard Tregoz).

This was the Grange of the Abbey of Stanley. The Demesnes thereto belonging, with some other smaller tenements of the same Tenure, are in value above a thousand pounds per annum, and pay but 8s. in lieu of their tithes. For Pope Innocent, the 1st of that name, decreed in the Lateran Councell, that no Cistertian, he being of that Order himself, should pay any tithes.¹

Johannes de Winterburg, Rector of Lydiard Ewias, sued for, or claimed his Tithes of the said Abbot, who appeals to the Pope, and his Holinesse, after the recital of many privileges this Order always enjoyed, adds, as I have seen it in the Decree,² "Nos tamen de communi assensu et voluntate, ut omnis in posterum cesset occasio malignandi inter Domum nostram et dictam Ecclesiam de Lydiard-Ewias et ipsius Rectores, super decimis omnibus divino charitatis intuitu assignamus octo solidos dicto Johanni et successoribus suis annuatim in festo Sti. Michaelis in Ecclesiâ de Lydiard Ewias per aliquem ex nostris in perpetuum reddendos, &c."

This was confirmed by Robert, Bishop of Sarum, given at Ramsbury, but without date.³

as the stone has disappeared. It seems to allude to some wrong suffered during lifetime, and to be addressed particularly to the oppressor, who survived. What the story was, or to what person it refers, it is now impossible to say: but the initials, "B. J." and the date, happen to correspond with an entry in the Lydiard Register of Burials, "Bridget Jacob, Sept. 25th, 1667."

³ Neither the Deed of Agreement nor the Confirmation Deed are dated: but from the attestation of "Stephen, Archdeacon of Wilts," and other incidental evidence, it must have been about the first year of Robert Bingham, Bishop, A.D. 1228. It seems to have been at the General Council, 10th Lateran, A.D. 1139, under Innocent II. (who however was not of that Order) that the Cistercians either were exempted from paying Tithes on their estates, or agreed in some cases to make Composition for them. At that period there were very few Cistercian houses in England, but the number increasing, fresh land being broken up and the Parish Priest losing all benefit, the Bishops began in course of time to re-assert their claim to tithe, contending that the exemption in favour of the Cistercians at the Council of 1139 only applied to such lands as they tilled before that year. Whereupon Pope Honorius III. (1216) pronounced that the privilege should be understood to apply to all lands whatsoever as well after as before. The Cistercian Abbey of Stanley, (near Chippenham) to which the whole tything of "Myghale" had been given about A.D. 1161 by King Henry II., contributing nothing out of that tything to the maintenance of the Rector of Lydiard, successive Rectors murmured so much that the Abbot, William of Stanley, at length relented; and by the following Deed, of about A.D. 1228, between himself and John de Winterburg, Rector of Lydiard, bound himself and his successors to pay 8s. a year; the Rector formally acknowledging it as a bounty, and withdrawing all claim to tithe. Eight Shillings a year in the year 1228 represented about the value of three oxen. This Composition is not mentioned in the "Valor Ecclesiasticus" under the payments and receipts of Stanley and Lydiard.

COMPOSITION between the Abbot of Stanley and the Rector of Lydiard. Translated from a Latin Copy, exhibited in Court on a Trial between the Earl of Hertford v. St. John, 4th May, 1587:—

"To all, &c. William Lord Abbot of Stanley and the Convent there, and John, Parson of Lydiard Ewyas, greeting. Whereas it is well known to all, that the Order of Cistercians hath been for a long time past, by privilege from the Roman Pontiffs, exempted from payment of Tythe; And we, being of that Order, have enjoyed that exemption and immunity in our Grange of Mygehale with its appurtenances and in all our lands and possessions within the limits of the said Parish of Lydiard Ewyas from the time of the Foundation of our House: To wit, that no payment whatsoever of any kind under the name of tythe, great or small, hath ever been made by us to the said Church or any Rector thereof, or even to the said John: In order however that all occasion of complaint may in future be put an end to between our House and the said Church of Lydiard Ewyas and the Rectory thereof, respecting any kind of Tythes, we of our common consent and will, having a holy respect unto charity, Do assign Eight Shillings to be paid every year at Michaelmas unto the said John and his successors in the Church of Lydiard Ewyas, by some one of us for ever. But whereas neither I John, (the Rector) nor the said Church, nor any of my predecessors, have ever received any thing whatever under the name of Tythe out of the aforesaid Grange and its appurtenances, nor out of the lands or possessions of the said Monks; being however sensible that the condition of the said Church hath been amended by their bounty, I have freely accepted their favour, and give my assent that the said Abbot and Convent shall be exempt from payment of all Tythes which can possibly be demanded of them either of parochial right or in any other way, by the said Church, or by myself, or by any other Rector, under any

The Custome of Word-ale.

The tenants in memorie of this Decree doe yearly, every one in his order, about the Feast of All Saints, keep a Feaste for their fellow-tenants which they call a Word-ale. It was celebrated heretofore with great solemnitie, many prayers being made for the Abbot of Stanley, and the Monks of the Cistercian Order, now forgotten; all that they yet retaine is,

“You are to pray for the Abbot of Stanley, and all the Monks of the Cistercian Order, by whom we are all Tithe-free, Tithe-free. By whom we are all Tithe-free, Tithe-free, &c.”

These words are sung by the chorus, whilst one drinkes a carouse, holding a white wand in his hand; and so all round. When the Feast is ended, he that then kept it delivers his Wand to him that by course is to keep it the yeare following.¹

pretence whatsoever. For the better security of this Composition both I John, and the said Abbot and Convent, have hereunto affixed our seals, and at our request the Reverend the Archdeacon of Wilts as Ordinary, the See of Sarum being vacant, has affixed his seal. Witnesses, Master Luke, Canon of Sarum, William ———, Robert Bacon and others.”

Nearly 2000 acres in Midgehall Tything are still quit of all tithe to the Rector, in consideration of the eight shillings abovementioned.

Soon after the Dissolution of Monasteries, Midgehall, where there is an old moated house, became the property of the Pleydells of Coleshill, Berks, some of whom resided there and were buried in Lydiard Church. Sir Charles Pleydell of Midgehall, Knighted 1618, died 1642. His second wife was Jane St. John: and their fourth daughter married Benjamin Culme D.D. who is buried in the Church yard. Sir Charles's grandson, Edmund Pleydell, married Ann sole daughter and heir of Sir John Morton of Milborne St. Andrew's co. Dorset (who was also buried at Lydiard, 1623), and the name of Morton from this match was afterwards prefixed to Pleydell. William Bouverie, 1st Earl of Radnor, married Harriet only daughter and heir of Sir Mark Stuart Pleydell of Coleshill, and the estates have passed to his Lordship's descendant the present owner.

¹ A Private Court or Feast, said to be observed with some old ceremony which the paymasters of this slender impost pretend that they are not permitted to divulge, is kept at Midgehall on the first Sunday after New Michaelmas. For an account of the “Ancient Ales” of Wiltshire, see Wilts. Archæol. Mag. II. 161; and for this particular one, Ditto II. 399. The meaning of “Word”-Ale, is not exactly known, but it is most likely, (as suggested by the Rev. E. Wilton), from the Anglo-Saxon, Worð, Land. A “carouse,” formerly meant a “bumper-toast.”

BROADSTOCK cum CLACK (Bradenstoke, in Lyneham).

V. Lib. B. 51. (at present missing. Ed.)

Mr. Petrus Zittzschar, a Danish Gent., tells me that in their language Clack signifies Defamatio.

A learned Suedish Gent. sayes, Clack in Swedish signifies macula, a blot. Vide in British Dictionary. — Resp. Non inventum.

In Hexam's Low-Dutch Dictionarie KŁACK signifies a cleft, chap, crevice; Item a mill-clack: also, a clapper of Lazarus.

survey under "Stock," which was the original name of Braden-stoke; and if so, it belonged at that time to Edward of Salisbury. The manor and Rectorial tithe certainly formed part afterwards of the gift made to Bradenstoke Priory by his descendant Walter D'Eureux the Founder of that Monastery. The impropriation of the church took place in A.D. 1256. [See the Deed in New Mon.] The cure of souls was provided for by the Abbey; which seems to have obtained some kind of privilege for Lyneham, as there are no Presentations of that period in the Sarum Registry and it was one of the few benefices exempt from First Fruits and Tenths.

Among the chief proprietors after the Dissolution was Richard Long who died 1558, youngest son of Sir Henry Long of Wraxhall and Draycote, by Eleanor Wrottesley. His estate continued for five generations in his descendants, some of whom were buried in the church, and was sold by Edmund Long who died s. p. 1681. There was a grant here to Thomas Matson 1556—7: and in 1560 Letters Patent granting the demesne and manor of Lyneham to William Button Esq. and Thomas Estcourt, gent.

THICKTHORN was granted on lease by the Crown, temp. Edw. VI. to John Wichicote.

A part of LITTLECOTE lying nearest to Lyneham belonged to Bradenstoke Priory, given probably by John Elcombe and Joan his wife 13 Hen. IV.

¹ "Clack," by the consent of several languages, is certainly a word adopted to represent an importunate noise, whether of the tongue, or any other too persevering instrument: and the clack of a mill is the continual rattle caused by shaking the hopper to make the corn run: but that the hamlet of Clack, near Bradenstoke Abbey, should have taken its name from the usual noise of a mill there, does not seem very likely. It is described in documents of A.D. 1540 as "The Manor of Clake." Clæg is Anglo-Saxon for clay.

A "Clapper of Lazarus" is more easily explained. A Leper used to be called a Lazar, from being full of sores like Lazarus. The ceremonies observed on the occasion of declaring a man a leper and cutting him off from social intercourse, were in the highest degree terrible and tragic. After a dismal mass in church he was conducted to a solitary abode far from all society: and was provided with a hood, a cloak, a sheepskin rug, a pair of clappers, a leathern girdle, and a birchen staff. The clappers were for giving notice of his approach, in order that people might get out of his way. In Chaucer, Venus is represented as condemning Cressida to go

" Begging from house to house
With cuppe and clapper, like a Lazarous."

For full particulars upon the subject of Lepers, see "Jephson's Walking Tour in Britany 1859," p. 76.

BRADENSTOKE PRIORY. The general name for the whole parish was simply "Stock," village; the property of Edward of Salisbury at the Norman Survey. Sometimes it was called "Stoke apud Clive." From comprehending other hamlets it became "Broad;" in Saxon, Braden-stóc. It had nothing to do with Braden Forest, being beyond the limits. Bradenstock as the name of the Village occurs so late as 1361. A House of Regular Canons of St. Augustine, or Priory of Black Canons, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, was founded here 13th April, A.D. 1142, by Walter D'Eureux of Salisbury and Sibil Chaworth his wife. He was descended from Edward of Salisbury, and was grandfather of Ela Countess of Sarum the Foundress of Lacock Abbey. An account of Bradenstoke Priory, with copies of some charters, is in the "New Monasticon." See also Bowles and Nichols's "History of Lacock," chap. 2, to which some additions, with a woodcut, are given in "Gent. Mag." Nov. 1833: and in "Britton's Beauties of Wilts." One Register of the Priory is in the British Museum (Cotton MSS. Vit. A. xi): and another (formerly at Stowe) is now in the library of Lord Sherborne. (For a description of the contents of this valuable volume, which is of the reign of Hen. VII. see O'Connor's "Bibliotheca MS. Stowensis" vol. ii. p. 147). Sir Thomas Phillipps has some Extracts. See also Dodsworth's Collections in Bodl. Library. In Buck's views there is a Plate of the Priory as it was in 1732. Tanner (Notitia) says that William Aubrey the Antiquary's brother had the Rental Book of the House: [which William Aubrey had obtained from the family of Stokes of Kington St. Michael, in this way. One of his letters to his brother John the Antiquary, begins, "Deare Brother. I have here sent you the examination of that which was the destruction of the Danvers family. Mr. Thomas Stokes desired a copie of it. . . . Mr. Jo. Stokes doe not much care to part with any thing, but could not well denie me Bradstock Rent Roll, and on his slight grant I seized it. These things my cousin Power" (also of Kington St. Michael) "has the best title to, and will freely give it me."]

In "Baker's Northamptonshire," pt. v. p. 317, is a ludicrous account of a dispute between the Prior of Bradenstoke's tenants at Towcester in that county and the Lord of that Manor who insisted that they should bake their bread in his oven. The grant to this Priory by one Le Gras, of a Manor "Apud Wales" (see Monasticon, Charter No. iv.), applies, not to the Principality, but to a township of that name in the Parish of Laughton le Morthen, co. York. [See Hunter's S. Yorks. I. 307.]

The Priory Church, mentioned in charters of John and Hen. III., was dedicated to St. Mary. It stood South of the present remains. Aubrey (Nat. Hist. of Wilts p. 100) describing it in A.D. 1666, says that the cellar, in which was a strong spring of water, was "the stateliest in Wilts." The Church had been at that time long destroyed, and the foundations digged up. On the West of the hall had once been the "King's Lodgings" which stood till A.D. 1588. King John was often here, and left by Will some jewels to the Priory. There was some tradition (Harl. MS. 980, p. 286,) that during disturbances of the period, Hen. II. was three times crowned

"in a chapel" in the "Vill of Braden." The fine wooden roof, engraved in Mr. J. Parker's edition of "Rickman's Architecture," p. 181, and the vaulted cellar, are still left: but the present building is in a tottering condition. It is a conspicuous object from a great distance, and commands a wide view over, what Aubrey elsewhere calls [Nat. Hist. of Wilts. 125.], the "tuff-taffety vale" towards Malmsbury, &c. There is an old Monastic barn, and near it, in a stable, a window taken from the old Priory, very like the one in the vestry of Sutton Benger Church. The large Perpendicular window seen in Buck's view is now destroyed. Under it were the following shields and devices, some of which are now on a cornice over a porch on the East side.

1. A Calvary-cross-staff within two wreaths. (Perhaps for Fitz-Jocelyn Bishop of Bath and Wells 1174—1191, who gave to the Priory the Church of Chilcompton). 2. On a cross five roses. 3. France and England. 4. Checky. 5. Three ostrich feathers in pale. 6. A Monogram, W. S. (Wm. Snow, the last Prior.) 7. Three Lions passant gardant. (Plantagenet.) 8. An orle (?) 9. Paly of six arg. and vair: on a chief a lion. Langford. (Perhaps for Stephen de Langford who gave to the Priory, Chitterne and Langford. In Harl. MS. 6124. f. 19. this shield is mentioned as used by Patrick D'Eureux son of the Founder. But Quære.) 10.  A capital T. Quære, for Todenham, one of the Priors?

On a boss in the middle of the ceiling of what is called the Refectory is a large S. A tiled pavement, six feet under ground, was laid open behind the present house, on the site of the old church, in 1851. On one of the tiles, the Arms of Gilbert de Clare a benefactor, (Charter vi). On another the shield of Heytesbury and Hungerford quarterly. Some of them were removed to pave the floor of the porch at Dauntesey parsonage. Stone coffins have also been discovered. A large carved stone chimneypiece, of late style, much too large for the very small apartment commonly shown as "The Prior's Room" in which it still remains, is engraved in the "Builder," Vol. vii. No. 341, p. 387. On it are the initials W. A. L. S., hitherto unexplained. (The "Builder" gives the letters as W. H. L.) The Seal of the Priory is engraved in Bowles and Nichols's "Lacock," p. 31. Of another seal found here not long ago, a description and drawing are given in "Wilts. Archæol. Mag." II. 391.

The endowment of the Priory by the D'Eureux family consisted of the Manor and Tithes of all Bradenstoke and Lyncham, land at Etchilhampton, a chapel at Lake, the Rectorial tithes of the Manor of Wilcote, Easton and the Church, also lands at Littlecote in Hilmerton; besides others in co. Dorset. Subsequently it obtained from various benefactors property at Seagry, Chitterne, Christmalford, Ore, Stowell, and many other places in Wilts and other counties: for which see the New Monasticon. An ancient Hospital of St. John at Wotton Bassett was united to it in 1405. In Wiltshire the Prior presented to the Vicarage of Wilcot (but none of his Presentations are registered); to Lyncham, Seagry, Marden, and Haselbury chapel. Leland (Coll. i. 65.) says that in his time the King was considered Patron and second Founder in his right of the Duchy of Lancaster.

Broad-Hinton House, Bromham house and Cadnam House were built of the Ruines of Bradstock Abbey. The two former were burnt in the late Warres and Cadnam is propt for fear of falling.

At the Dissolution the general manor seems to have been divided. Some part was granted to Edward Baynton. In temp. Elizabeth there was a Suit in Chancery between Edward Savage and Sir Robert Rennington and the Lady Eleanor his wife, concerning a claim as heir male to one fourth. The Bailiwick of the Priory was granted to Henry Lanum. But the site of the Priory itself, in 1546, to Richard Pexhall, in exchange. [Harl. MSS. 4316: p. 73, and 7389, p. 35.] Sir Richard, son of Ralph Pexhall and Edith Brocas, married Eleanor daughter of William Paulett, Marquis of Winchester K.G., by whom he had four daughters and coheirs. He died 1571 and was buried in Westminster Abbey. The Priory passed to Sir Richard Brocas. For some account of this family see Coll. Top. et Gen. viii. 397: and Lipscombe's Bucks. (A Sir Bernard Brocas had been patron of Barford St. Martin's in Wilts in 1394.) About 1640 the Priory was purchased by Henry Danvers Lord Danby, of Dauntsey, who died 1643. His two nieces, daughters of his brother Sir John Danvers the Regicide, had a joint interest. In 1667 446 acres in Clack and Lyneham belonged to the representatives of Sir John: viz, his eldest daughter Elizabeth, Lady Purbeck, and the children of his second daughter Anne, Lady Lee of Ditchley. (Robert Wright) Villiers, Viscount Purbeck, the husband of Sir John's eldest daughter, is mentioned in one of Aubrey's MSS. as the gentleman who might supply him with a view of the Priory, to illustrate his intended History of North Wilts. From Anne Lady Lee (Sir John Danvers's youngest coheiress), the Priory appears to have passed to her daughters. One of them, Eleanor, married James, Earl of Abingdon, who was owner at his death in 1699.

The "Index Villaris" AD. 1700, mentions Bradenstoke as a seat of the Duke of Somerset. Germanicus Sheppard, the proprietor to whom Buck's View is dedicated in 1732, died here in 1758. Afterwards it belonged to the Selfes of Beanacre near Melksham, a coheiress of which family brought it in marriage to the ancestor of the present owner, Lord Methuen. Sir John de Bradenstoke, Kt., whose family name was Russell, is often mentioned in Deeds relating to this neighbourhood, c. 1306—54.

A communication about Clack Fall Fair, and some minor matters connected with the village may be found in Hone's Every Day Book, ii. 1371 and iii. 231: printed also in the "Wilts. Independent" of 13th Oct. 1859. "Clack Mount" is an old square earthwork. In the village are the remains of a Cross.

¹This seems to be the "West Ockham" or "West Cocham" of the Inquisitions, Sylvester Doignel's in 20 Edw. I: but given probably by the Russells of Bradenstoke to that Priory, to SWINDON.

This Towne probably is so called, quasi Swine-Downe, for it is situated on a Hill or Downe, as well as many other places, viz. Horse-ley, Cow-ton, Sheep-ton, &c. take their name from other animals.¹ It is famous for the Quarrie, which is which it certainly belonged in 1344, and until the Dissolution. A lease had been given before 1514 by the Convent to the first Sir John Danvers of Dauntsey, or his widow Anne (the heiress of Stradling) Lady Danvers. By her will 1539 she left it to her younger son John. After the Dissolution the Crown renewed the lease of the manor and tithes to him. His son Richard shortly before his death in 1604 sold it to William Button Esq., (Chanc. Proceed.), retaining "Walter's" at Tockenham Wick. John Aubrey's grandmother Rachel Danvers was daughter of a Richard Danvers of Tockenham.

The popular tongue of Wiltshire, which confounds the vowels i and u, converting "Bishop" into "Buship," and "pulpit" into "pilput," is probably also answerable for having changed, into Button, the name of the old family of De Bitton, so called from a Parish in co. Gloucester, between Bristol and Bath. About 1540 and afterwards, they became large proprietors in North Wilts at North Wraxhall, Beechingstoke, Woodborough and Sutton Veney: also at Alton and Stowell near Marlborough under lease from the Earl of Pembroke. William Button of Alton sold Rood Ashton (then a small manor) to the Longs about 1593. His son Sir William, the first Baronet, resided at West Tockenham Court. In the Civil Wars he was a staunch Royalist and suffered accordingly. His house here was twice stripped. In June 1643 Sir Edward Hungerford, then Commander of the Forces for the Parliament in Wilts, made a foray and carried off 380 sheep, 69 beasts, 160 weights of wool, besides the very beds and hangings from the rooms and the pewter and brass of the kitchen: total value £767. In the following June, 1644, a party of horse from Malmsbury garrison repeated the invasion, making spoil of 440 sheep, 50 beasts, 62 mares and foals, &c; and, from the house itself, damask curtains, scarlet cloth, silver plate, even "1 fair gridiron," 100 cheeses, and all the butter, together with the apparatus for making it, out of the dairy: total value £526 6s. On 22nd November the same year, Sir Edmund Fowell, President of the Committee of Sequestration, was ordered to be the tenant to the State for Sir William Button's lands at Tockenham in Lyncham, paying £320 a year rent. Sir William appears to have lived afterwards at his Manor of Shaw near Overton, and in 1646 was fined £2380 for "Delinquency." He was educated at Exeter College under Dr. Prideaux: and attended Sir Arthur Hopton in his Embassy through France and Spain. "His hospitality," says D. Lloyd, "exemplary, charity great, to poor Ministers and Cavaliers greater, to poor Scholars at School and the University greatest of all." He died 1654. From this family, West Tockenham has descended in the same way as Compton Cumberwell (see COMPTON BASSET), to its present owner, G. H. W. Heneage Esq.

neer the Towne, of that excellent paveing stone, which is not inferior to the Purbec Grubbes, but whiter, and will take a little polish; they send for it to London; it is a white stone; it was not discovered till about thirty yeares agon: and I am now writing in 1672: yet it lies not above 4 or 5 foot deep.¹ Here is on Munday every very suitable for fattening swine. It is more likely to be named from some owner, a Saxon or Danish "Sweyn," a name not only often found in ancient Wilts records, but still well known in the county.

The Parish of Swindon was divided at the Conquest among five proprietors, of whom the chief were the Bishop of Bayeux, Ulward the "King's Prebendary," and Odin his chamberlain. In Hen. III. and Edw. I. lands are mentioned as belonging to the several monasteries of Malmsbury, Wilton and Ivy Church: but the name is not found in the lists of those houses at the Dissolution. The principal manor of High Swindon was conferred (among other estates) by King Hen. III. upon his half-brother William de Valence, created Earl of Pembroke, of Goderich Castle: one of the many French noblemen whose importation into England excited the jealousies of that Reign. For his history see the Baronage. His son, Aylmer de Valence, was Lord of the manor in 1323: and in 1377 it was held by his widow Mary de St. Paul, Countess of Pembroke, Foundress of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge. Aylmer de Valence dying without issue, a part of this estate passed to his sister's daughter, Elizabeth Comyn, who brought it in marriage to Richard, second Baron Talbot of Goderich Castle: and in 1473 it belonged to his descendant, John, Earl of Shrewsbury. In those early days part of it was held under the Honour of Pont de l'Arche or Pontlarge. In 1560 the Swindon estate was purchased by Thomas Goddard of Upham, ancestor of the present owner A. L. Goddard Esq. of the Lawn. This family name occurs in deeds relating to this parish of the date of A.D. 1404. "Wadard" was the name of one of the two tenants who in the Domesday Survey held land at Swindon under the Bishop of Bayeux. The Charter granted to Thomas Goddard Esq. 1627, for holding a weekly market and two fairs yearly, was printed in the "Swindon Advertiser," 12th September, 1859. Everard, Spilman, and Avenel, are found here in 1316. The woods "super Rectoriam," were sold by the Crown to Thomas Stephens (of Burderop) in 3 Elizabeth. At Even-Swindon, Wenman was an owner in 33 Hen. VIII.

At WICKLESCOTE in this parish, on the South side of Swindon Down, Everard, and the Lovells (of Titchmarsh) were the proprietors in Edw. III. and Hen. IV. Some lands here, held under Philip Basset's manor of Wotton, were given by Katharine Lovell to Lacock Nunnery, and at the Dissolution were bought by John Goddard of Upham. John Wroughton had a manor in 7 Hen. VI. Sir Edward Darell of Littlecote also had one at his death 3 Edw. VI.

Somebody is buried by, I suppose his wife, but

The old Parish Church, "Holy Rood," but called "St. Mary's" in 1302 (Wilts. Inst.), being small and much dilapidated, was all taken down except the Chancel, and a new one, "Christ-Church," was erected, in 1850: the site of which, and the ground for a new church-yard, together with £1000, were given by the Goddard family, Lords of the Manor. The New church was consecrated by the Right Rev. Dr. Ollivant, Bishop of Llandaff (acting for the Diocesan) November 7th, 1851. The New Town of Swindon, called into existence within these few years by the Great Western Railway and its large establishment, has a church of its own, dedicated to St. Mark: erected, as well as the Parsonage, at the Railway Company's expense.

Mem. At Brome, near Swindon, in a pasture ground, near the house, stands up a great stone, q. Sarsden, called Longstone, about 10 foot high, more or less: which I take to be the remayner of a Druidish Temple; in the ground below are many stones in a right line, thus: O O O O O O O.²

² BROME belonged in Edw. I. to the Alien Priory of Martigny. After the Dissolution to the Seymours. By Katharine daughter of Charles sixth Duke of Somerset, it came to the Wyndhams, of the Egremont house: and from them was purchased a few years ago by A. L. Goddard Esq. Of the great stones mentioned by Aubrey none are now remaining.

Two memoranda, relating to Swindon, may be added. A door-way of very Saxon-like construction, in a cellar in the High Street, was brought to light in January 1860. Of Robert Sadler, the author of "Wanley Penson, or the Melancholy Man," who was born at Swindon in 1754, there is a memoir in Britton's Autobiography, p. 341.

WANBOROUGH.

From Mr. Browne.

“ Under correction of better judgment, I should take it to be called Wans-borough, corruptedly, from Wodens-burgh, as Wans-dyke elsewhere in this countrey.

“ At several places hereabouts are every yeare digged up Roman coynes, ruines of houses, and black ashes, especially about the meadow called ‘The Nighs.’³

¹ Called Tockenham East, T. Vetus, or T. Wick. In Domesday Book are four or five various holdings under “Tocheham.” In temp. John and Hen. III., these were in the hands of Spileman, Fitz Piers (of Stanton Fitzherbert), Beinton (under the Bohuns), and Bradenstoke Priory (under the Mortimers): but it is uncertain to which of the two Tockenhams each of these precisely belonged. King Ina gave lands at “Tokenham” to the Church of St. James in Old Sarum. In Edw. II. Tockenham Manor was part of the estate of Hugh Despenser, of Fasterne, &c. In the next and following reigns it was dower of the Queens of England. In 3 Hen. V. (1415) it was bestowed by the Crown on the Duke of York in further endowment of Fotheringhay College. In Edw. VI. it was granted by the Crown to Wright. Gryffin Curtree is named as principal landholder in 1565 (Subsidy Roll). In Charles I. and II., Thomas Smith. By the marriage of Mary Smith, it came to John Jacob of Wotton Bassett, and also of Norton near Malmsbury. His son, John Jacob of Tockenham House, the last male, was Sheriff of Wilts 1756 and died s. p. 1776. Anne his eldest sister, by Will 1780, founded charities here and at Hilmerton, (which see). Elizabeth the youngest sister, became ultimately sole heiress, and brought the estates in marriage to John Buxton Esq. of Tybenham and Rushford co. Norfolk, to whose descendant Sir Robert Jacob Buxton Bart., of Shadwell co. Norfolk, they now belong.

² The Church is called after St. John. It was in the gift of Hugh Despenser, in Edw. II.: but from that time to the present has been in Royal patronage. Malmesbury Abbey had a small interest in the Tithes from the time of the Confessor to the Dissolution. Against the church there is a niche containing a curious figure, with a staff apparently entwined by a serpent.

In the Ann. Register 1759, and Britton's Beauties of Wilts, III. 44, is a curious account of John Ayliffe Esq. a native of this place who was executed in October of that year for having forged under peculiar circumstances, a Presentation to the Rectory of Brinkworth.

³ The word ‘Nighs’ is a probable corruption either of ‘Nythe’ the name of a brook at this place, or of ‘Nidum,’ the Roman Station which, according to Sir R. C. Hoare, (Anc. Wilts. II. 94), once occupied the ground to a large extent about the brook, near Covenham Farm. At this point a Roman road, coming from Cricklade, parted into two branches: the one continuing to Cunetio (near Marlborough) the other to Spinæ (Speen near Newbury). The soil at the 'Nighs' abounds in the usual marks of Roman occupation. In the year 1689, between sixteen hundred and two thousand coins were found in one vessel; none later than Commodus. [Aubrey Mon. Brit.] Sir R. C. Hoare gives a ground plan of the site.

WANBOROUGH. In A.D. 590, a battle of importance in its day, was fought between Ceawlin, third King of Wessex, and his nephew Ceolric at a place which one copy of the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle calls Wods-bergh, and another Wodens-berg. If the former is correct, the village of Woodborough near the Wansdyke, may have been the scene: if the latter, Wanborough. Dr. Guest, Master of Caius College, Cambridge, considers it to have been Wanborough. [See Archæol. Inst. Journal, 1859, p. 107.] Mr. Sharon Turner (Hist. of England, I. 329 and 331), erroneously describes Wanborough as near the Wansdyke, from which it is several miles distant.

Wanborough is in the old Hundred of Thornhill. In Domesday Book it is called "Wemberghe," and was held by the Bishop of Winchester, for the support of the Monastery of that city: but it is not named in Tanner as one of the estates of the Convent. In Hen. II. it belonged to William Longespée Earl of Sarum who in 30 Hen. III. (1245) gave it (but still to be held under his lordship, as it continued to be under his representatives, Laci Earl of Lincoln 1264, and Montacute, Earl of Sarum, 1396) to his brother Stephen, Justiciary of Ireland. [Grant, with Seals, Harl. Chart: 53. B. 14.] In 1252 Stephen obtained a grant for a market and fair. He died 1260 leaving a widow Emmeline, called, in right of a former husband, Countess of Ulster: and two daughters and coheirs, 1. Ela, wife of Roger Le Zouche, who had a son Alan Zouche: and 2. Emmeline, wife of Maurice Fitz-maurice, who left no issue. Alan Zouche had a daughter and heiress Matilda, wife of Robert de Holand. Their grand-daughter and heiress Matilda Holand, Lady of Wanborough, brought it in marriage to John fifth Baron Lovel of Titchmarsh, 1375. From him descended Francis Viscount Lovel, the Favourite of Rich. III., concerning whose death a mysterious story is told. See Burke's Ext. Peerage. He died without issue and was attainted 1487. Between that year and 1515 the Manor "late Viscount Lovel's" was enjoyed by John Cheyne Knight, then by Sir Richard Elyot, father of Sir Thomas the diplomatist (see Notes and Queries viii. 276); and lastly, by Sir Edward Darell of Littlecote who died owner 1549. His grandson Sir John (of Kintbury) sold it to Sir Humphrey Forster of Aldermaston about 1614. Britton (Beauties of Wilts) says that in Queen Anne's reign it belonged to Sir Charles Hedges who sold it to Samuel Sharpe Esq., of Bath.

Under the Fee of Longespée, Sewale D'Oseville (a benefactor to Bradenstoke and a proprietor near Chippenham) held a portion of Wanborough temp. Edw. I. Other names are, in Edw. I. Fitz Geoffrey (see "CHERRHILL,") under whom Foliot, Turville, and others: Almaric St. Amand, Edw. II.: Katharine Aylmer, 35 Edw. III.: Sir James Windsor of Stanwell, co. Middlesex, who is mentioned as having married Elizabeth daughter and heiress of Sir John Streechie of Wanborough, about A.D. 1360, (See Scrope and Grosvenor Roll vol. II. 213): Sir John Roche (who married a coheir of Delamere in 1378); William Fitz William and William Wroughton, in Hen. IV.: and in 1565, Thomas Brynd, who was also Patron of the Rectory of Stanton Fitzwarren (called in Wilts. Instit., perhaps by mistake, Stanton Fitz Brynd). The name of this family survives in a charity given to the parish by Margaret Brynd in 1747. Their pedigree is in Wilts. Visit. 1623. In the Rolls Record Office are some curious papers relating to the murder of a Mr. Brind of Wanborough in A.D. 1571. In 32 Hen. VIII. there was a grant (Originalia) in Wanburgh and Upham to John Goddard.

"Here is a tradition that at a certain place in this parish called Court Close, sometime resided the famous Lovell, favorite to Richard the Third, King of England. The howse with a chapell adjoining, and another (chapel) at Hall-place in this parish, dedicated to Saint Ambrose, were, as I am informed, carried to the building of the Tower. Here are few vestigia of any such structure (i.e. Court Close) to be discovered, only a mote, which encompassed the house, commonly called Lovell's mote.¹

Clement Harding B.L.L., 1507, gave some land here to New College Oxon. of which he was Fellow. Bradenstoke Priory had also a small interest in the parish.

ERDESCOTE (now Eastcot) belonged (35 Edw. III.) to Blount, holding under Bohun, Earl of Hereford: afterwards to the Lovells. Blackgrove, 200 acres, was also theirs.

Hall Place, also once moated, is near the lower town, and is believed to have belonged in 1418 to the Polton family mentioned in the inscriptions given by Aubrey. Of any chapel here dedicated to St. Ambrose nothing is known. The field in which Hall Place stood is now called "Ambrose," and was the property of the late Mrs. F. A. Carrington. There are distinct marks of building in it. The two traditions, viz., that Francis, Viscount Lovell the favourite of Rich. III. resided at Court Close, and yet that the materials of his house were used in building the square tower of the Church, are inconsistent. For this Lord Lovell did not become owner of the estate till 1464 and died 1487: but the tower was built (as a date upon it testifies) in 1435.

THE CHAPEL OF ST. KATHARINE OF WANBOROUGH.

In the Sarum Registers, and in various other authorities, a chapel of this name is mentioned. It has hitherto been commonly supposed to have been the small projection, still remaining, attached to the North side of the chancel of the Parish Church: but the Editor is of opinion that St. Katharine's must have been a distinct and independent building, in a different part of the Parish.

He has ascertained that in St. Katharine's Chapel, wheresoever it may have stood, there were two Foundations, by separate families.

1. LONGESPEE's Foundation. From a reference in a Deed in the Hungerford Chartulary (see below) it appears that a chantry in the Chapel of St. Katharine had been founded, and rules laid down for its observances, by Emmeline, Countess of Ulster, (Comitissa Ultoniæ), the widow of Stephen Longespée. Her death was in 1276. Her daughter the Lady Emmeline Longespée (widow of Fitz-maurice whose name she dropped, resuming, according to a custom of great heiresses, her own paternal surname on becoming a widow, in 1291) held lands "pro cantariâ faciendâ." (I. p. M. 19 Edw. I.) She died 1331, æt. 79. The Chaplain was called "Custos:" and in 1334 he was further endowed by Lady Emmeline's successor in the Manor, Matilda, daughter of Alan Zouche, and wife of Robert de Holand, with the unusually large sum of 100 marks a year arising out of lands here, and 14 marks a year out of her Manor of Steeple Lavington. The Custos was instituted by the Bishop: and Presentations continued to be made by the successive Lords of the Manor, Holand, and Lovel, until 1466: and in February 1483, Francis Viscount Lovel, the last of the family, sold the Chapel of St. Katharine with all its lands, the house of the Custos, &c., to William Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, for his College of St. Mary Magdalene at Oxford: which Society is now a proprietor in the parish of Wanborough.

2. WAMBERGH's Foundation. By a Deed in the Hungerford Chartulary, dated at Wanborough 14th July 1336, John de Wambergh, Canon of Wells, gave to the Custos 47 acres of land called "Tenpoundworth land," and a messuage at Colne, inherited from his brother Robert de Wambergh, Archdeacon of Wells, and Rector of Steeple Lavington (to which, Robert had been presented in 1315 by Lady Emmeline Longespée late Fitz-maurice, Lady of that Manor); to provide two priests to say daily mass at any altar in the Chapel of St. Katharine; for the souls of his brother and himself, Emmeline Longespée, Robert and Matilda Holand, Richard Delamere, Sir Robert Hungerford, and others (some of whom were still living). The two priests of this Foundation were to follow the rules of the Countess of Ulster's chantry in the same chapel: to board and lodge with the Custos and be paid by him. The Obits of Lady Emmeline and Robert the Archdeacon to be kept in the choir of the chapel, the Lady's on 15th May, his 12th October, with Placebo and Dirige, bells ("classica pulsari,") and a distribution to the Poor.

The facts above stated seem to imply some building of more suitable importance than the very humble one now on the North side of the chancel. For 1st. The usual provision in former times for a mere chantry priest serving a Family Altar in a parish church was about 10 or 12 marks per annum. But in this case there were Two Foundations, with an united endowment of 114 marks a year, besides the 47 acres of land at Colne, making an income equal to that of the Vicar of Wanborough in those days. 2nd. There were Five Priests in the service of the chapel, (three of Longespée's, two of Wambergh's) the Superior being called "Custos," a name sometimes given to the Head of a Brotherhood of Clergy (as was the case in the first foundation of Edington Priory in Wilts). 3rd. St. Katharine's had a "Choir," in which certain services are directed to be performed; it had more than one altar, bells, &c. 4th. St. Katharine's Chapel and its lands were sold as freehold in 1483 by Lord Lovell to Bishop Waynflete who gave them to Magdalen College, Oxon. Although the Chapel was then suppressed and its services were discontinued, still, if it had been part of the Parish Church, the College would probably have remained liable to the repair of that part, which does not appear to be the case. Finally; whenever chantry chapels did stand within and under the roof of a Parish Church they were almost always distinctly so described in documents relating to them. This has not been hitherto found to be the case in any document where St. Katharine's is mentioned.

Taking all these circumstances together, it would seem as if St. Katharine's of Wanborough had been an edifice separate from and altogether independent of the Parish Church: and if so, most likely at Court Close, near Foxbridge, now commonly called "Cold Court," the ancient seat of the Lovells, the successors, in the Lordship of the Manor, to the Longespées and others; and now, belonging, as the writer is informed, to Magd. Coll: Oxon. Cold-court may perhaps be a corruption of Colne: the name of some lands which, as mentioned in the Deed of A.D. 1336, formed part of the endowment. Both Aubrey's informant Mr. Browne, and Captain Symonds, were told that a chapel, or church, had once stood there, and the name of "St. Margaret's," which the Captain retained, was an easy mistake to a passing visitor, for "St. Katharine's."

² Wanborough Church, St. Andrew's, is built in a peculiar way. The Nave has a square tower at its West end, and, at its East end, a slender spire with dormers. The date of the tower is known from an inscription affixed to it as A.D. 1435. The style of the spire is older. Captain Symonds (1644) was told that the chancel had been a chapel, the body added since. The following memorandum is said to be No. 1405 in Bishop Chandler's Register at Sarum (A.D. 1417—1426) "Wanbrough Capella non est dedicata: altare tamen principale consecratum est in honorem gloriosæ Virginis." (Wanbrough Chapel has not been dedicated: but the principal Altar has been consecrated in honour of the glorious Virgin.)

Under the floor of the church were discovered in 1843, lying with their faces downwards, portions of two effigies of a man and woman, drawn and described in Journal Archæol. Institute

“In the limbe of the windowe this Inscription :

Orate p Dna.^a que hanc fenestram fieri fecit. Anno Dni. millesimo. CCCC, LXXX, VI.

^a Emma Fisher, as I am informed.²

April 1851, as representing Lady Emmeline Longespée and her husband Fitz-maurice. But on the margin are plainly the words “Fiz-william et sa femme.” There was a family of this name here in 1341 [Non. Inq.] and 1378 (I. p. M.): and in Hen. IV., as mentioned above at foot of p. 195.

The Rectory of Wanborough was originally given by Bishop Osmund to endow his new Cathedral at Old Sarum in 1091. [Dug. New. Mon., Salisb. Chart. II.] But it was in some way soon alienated from that episcopal church. For in Prynne’s Papal Usurpations (iii. 438) there is an account of a process at law relating to the right of Advowson of Wanborough, from which it appears that so early as 1189 it had been transferred to the Alien Priory of Nugent le Rotroi, Depart. d’Eure et Loire, in France, probably through the interest of the Longespées, Earls of Salisbury, as in the Deed preserved by Prynne, we find Stephen Longespée (who died 1260) claiming the patronage of Wanborough and presenting one Hugh Penne: but the Pope by definitive sentence deprived the Presentee. The Prior of Nugent le Rotroi afterwards conveyed the Advowson to the Prioress of Ambros-bury in Wilts, and the Bishop of Salisbury allowed her to appropriate the church. Lady Emmeline Longespée (widow of Fitz-maurice) and her nephew Alan Zouche in 1289 resumed the contest for the patronage, but the Prioress succeeded in retaining it. The house of Font Evraud in Normandy, to which Ambresbury Priory was subordinate, also put forward a claim as Patron, but without success. [Wilts. Inst. p. 6.] At the Dissolution the Rectory and Advowson were granted to the Dean and Chapter of Winchester who have ever since presented to the Vicarage.

A copy of the Parish Registers forms No. 6506—8 in Sir Thomas Phillipps’s Collection of MSS. [Wilts Archæol. Mag. I. p. 100.] The Register of Burials begins 1582.

¹ According to Symonds (30 years before Aubrey) this shield was then entire, viz. Gules a fess indented Or, a bend ermine. There were also at that time three other shields in the church.

1. “In the cross North Yle, Argent (sic), 10 bezants, 4, 3, 2, 1, for ZOUCHE (see above, p. 195.)
2. South window, HOWARD, quartering BROTHERTON, WARREN, MOWBRAY, SEGRAVE, and BRAOSE.
3. North window, Or, a saltire Arg: with a label of 3 points Sable.” This shield is still in the window.

² The name ‘Fischere’ was there at Symonds’s visit. Probably Alice Fisher, elected Prioress of Ambresbury 16th May, 1486: who, becoming thereby Rector of Wanborough, may have adorned her chancel with the window.

"At the upper end of the South Aisle on a marble stone, this Inscription in brasse beneath their pictures,

"Marmoreo lapide Thomas jacet hic et Edgtha, Quem Polton vita quisque vocabat ita.
 Quos mors expulit hinc milleno Virginis anno Quadringenteno decimo, quibus addimus octo :
 Undena luce Septembris hunc, duodena
 Hanc Februi; gradicus fundas precamina plena.
 Octoque natorum natarum totque suarum,
 Collegium carum circumeundo Sarum.
 Ex obitu quorum Wanbergh curatus habebit
 Quatuor atque decem nummos que rite tenebit
 Post ortum Matris Dni Dnica die sequente,
 Ellermis de et Halle plase Wanbergh retinente."¹

The "Curate of Wanbergh" would, in the ordinary church-phrase of those days, appear to mean the resident clergyman in cure of the parish; who at this parish would be the Vicar. Because in 1418 (the date of the inscription) Ambresbury Nunnery was Rector; and any other clerk here must have been either the Custos, or some one of the chantry chaplains, of St. Katharine's Chapel, none of whom had any thing to do with the secular charge of the parish.

The two most perplexing lines are those in which, 1st, the Reader seems to be asked to pray for the souls of Thomas, Edith, and the sixteen children, "Collegium carum circumeundo Sarum," "in going round their beloved College at Sarum." (?) And 2nd (the last line) "Ellermis de et Halle plase Wanbergh retinente." As to the former, it is possible that Sarum may have been the place where some of the sixteen children were interred. Of the latter, the following is offered as a solution. The preposition "De," when placed in proper order, must come before Ellermis. The two easily make "Dellermis," which may have been intended for "Delamere's," the name of the family to whom some of the lands charged with the 14 "monies," may have previously belonged. The MS. Cartulary of Edington Priory (p. 152) mentions a Hugh Delamere of Wanborough in 1329. In the Foundation Deed of a chantry in St. Katharine's by the Archdeacon of Wells 1336 (above referred to), among the persons to be prayed for are Richard Delamere, his brother Hugh, and their parents William and Agnes Delamere. And among proprietors in Wanborough in 1411 was Sir John Roche who had married one of the coheiresses of Sir Peter Delamere of Aldermaston, co. Berks. It is therefore possible that some lands so called, had come into the possession of the Polton family, who had charged them with the 14 monies: the charge to endure so long as Wanborough Parish should continue to include “Delamere’s” and “Hall Place,” i.e., (as it was hoped) for ever.

Of “Anno Virginis” instead of “Anno Domini,” there is said to be an instance on a warrior’s tomb of the 14th century in Worms Cathedral.

² Thomas Hynton was the largest occupier of land in Wanborough in 1565. Captain Symonds (1644) found another inscription of this family on a plain monument of white stone. “Anthony Hinton Esq. ob. 7 May 1598 æt. 66, grandfather to Mr. Hinton privy counsellor to King Charles,” and a shield: on a bend cotised 3 martlets. Peter Tryon was a wealthy refugee from the Low countries driven out by the persecution of the Duke of Alva. See “Tryon,” Burke’s Ext. ¹ The Darells, as already mentioned, were Lords of Wanborough manor in Edw. VI. Hasted (Kent, vol. iii. 225) says: "when the house of Darell of Sesay branched off into Darell of Calehill, Kent, and Darell of Littlecote, Wilts, the Darells of Calehill bore a trefoil slipped on the shoulder of the lion: the Darells of Littlecote a cross crosslet fitchée. When Darell of Calehill became the eldest heir male, they used the original coat without the difference of the trefoil."

² The early descent of the manor of Wootton Vetus, alias Basset, was similar to that of Compton Basset (See P. 41, Note 2). The last Lord Basset of Wycombe who was owner here, having died in 1271, the name has survived nearly 600 years. By Aliva his daughter and heir the Manor and Church passed to the Despensers. She died 1280, having remarried Roger Bigod fifth Earl of Norfolk, and Earl Marshal, who held Wootton under the Earl of Cornwall as of the Honour of Wallingford. In 1334 it appears in the name of Edward Bohun: in 1358 of Isabella the Queen; in 1370 of William Wroughton: in 1401, of Edmund of Langley, Duke of York, fifth son of Edw. III. His son Edward, Duke of York, intended to bestow it upon Fotheringhay College, but his death at Agincourt 1415 hindered the endowment. His widow Philippa (Mohun) afterwards wife of Walter Fitzwalter was owner at her death 1431. In Edw. VI. (c. 1547) it was granted by the Crown to John Dudley Earl of Warwick, afterwards Duke of Northumberland, and on his attainder 1553 to Sir Francis Englefield, (of a Berks family) Master of the Court of Wards under Queen Mary. The last Presentation by his family was in 1620.

Lord Chancellor Clarendon, whilst living as Edward Hyde at Purton was returned to Parliament in 1640 for two places, Shaftesbury and Wootton Basset. He "made choice to serve his neighbours" of the latter place. The Manor was purchased by his second son Lawrence created Baron Hyde of Wootton Basset and Earl of Rochester. He died 1711. His son Henry became in 1723 fourth Earl of Clarendon. This Earl's only son, Henry Viscount Cornbury, died just before his father in 1753. One of the Earl's daughters, Jane, was wife of the Earl of Essex. Their daughter the Lady Charlotte Capel became heir. She married Thomas Villiers, created Lord Hyde of Hindon, and afterwards Earl of Clarendon, from whom it has descended to the present Earl.

Wootton Basset, 13 Eliz." By another Charter, 2nd December, 31 Charles II. (1679) in the Mayoralty of John Hollister, were granted (inter alia) two new Fairs, a Court of Piepowder, and a weekly Court of Record. The original Document of this date was discovered in 1859 among the papers of Meiler Owen Esq. of Goppa, Denbigh, and has been restored to the Corporation. The second Seal, (or as it is ungrammatically engraved, "Minor Sigillum,") of Wotton Basset bears the arms of Lawrence Hyde, in recognition of the interest through which the Charter of 1679 was obtained. "Schedule A" in the Reform Bill of 1832 closed the Poll books of this Borough. In the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. I. p. 74, is a drawing of an old engine for correction of scolds, called a "Cucking Stool," belonging to this Town.

The Rectory of Wootton was in the gift of the early Lords of the Manor, Basset, Despenser, and the Crown: until between 1361 and 1389 (Wilts Inst.) when the Tithes were appropriated to Stanley Abbey near Chippenham. The Vicar was nominated by the Abbot until the Dissolution. In 1551 the Tithes were leased by the Crown to Roger Blake. The patronage was granted to the Englefields and has since gone with the Lordship.

A Priory or Hospital of St. John the Baptist was founded here in A.D. 1266, (Orig. Deed in Chap. House Westm.): but in the reign of Hen. IV. it was united to Bradenstoke Priory. The "Custos" or Prior of St. John's, was generally some neighbouring incumbent. The only four Presentations recorded, 1307, 1342, 1353, 1380 were made by the Lord of the Manor. The Prior had certain ancient rights in the "Purlieu" of Braden Forest: viz. to cut trees to build his house, and to hunt with bow and hound, without hindrance from gamekeepers ("therio-phylaxis"). According to a Deed of 1565 (D. and C. of Sarum) these privileges descended to the Vicar of Wootton Basset.

² Fastern is on the road from Calne to Wootton Bassett. The name is variously mis-spelled Vastern, Vasthorne, Wasterne, &c., but the derivation is probably from the Anglo-Saxon, fæsten, an enclosure.

The course of ownership follows that of the Manor of Wootton Bassett. At the death of Aliva (Basset) Lady Despenser, 9 Edw. I. Fastern Park contained 789 acres of which 616 were arable, 173 pasture. In 13 Edw. II. Hugh Despenser obtained Letters Patent to enlarge it by taking 300 acres of wood then included under Braden. He also appears to have added to it by means less regular: and in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III. 247 is the account of a forcible entry made upon his Manor by the adherents of the parties whom he had injured. That it was the birthplace of Richard Cœur de Lion seems incorrect. The best authorities place that event at Fotheringhay Castle. At Fastern there was a country hunting seat for the Crown, with a domestic Chapel. The latter is mentioned in a Deed in the Rem. Off. Exchequer, Inq. 20 Edw. II. Leland (Collect: iv. 248) says; "a little before Lady Day 1489, King Henry VII. roode into Wiltshire an Hunting: and slew his gres (buck) in three places in that shire. He first hunted in the Forest of Savernake: the second in the goode Parke of Fastern, the third in Blackmore Forest, and so returned to Windsor. Also he was at Ramsbury with the Bishop of Salisbury." Fastern was granted by Patent (2 and 3 Phil. and Mary) 1555—6, to Sir Francis Englefield, who presently turned the "Great Park" into enclosures: leaving about 100 acres called Wootton Lawn to be used as common by the "Free Tenants of the borough," in lieu of the larger range of pasture of which he deprived them. Towards the time of the Commonwealth, in the Mayoralty of Jeffery Skeate, the Free Tenants sent a Petition to Parliament in which they gravely state that the very elements befriended their cause, for that whenever the landlord's cows entered the common, a storm invariably drove them out: insomuch that it grew to be a proverb at Wootton Bassett, instead of saying "it thunders," to say, "they're putting Sir Francis's cows into the lawn." The Petition is printed at length in Nichols's Topographer and Genealogist iii. 23, and Britton's Beauties of Wilts, iii. 39.

In 1578 Henry Knevett Esq. was exonerated from arrears of payment of £4 10s. per annum "of the farm of Fastern Park." [Jones's Index "Memor."]

Richard Rowsewell, whose pedigree and arms are in the Visitation of 1623, appears to have been tenant under the Englefields in that year: and in 1648, Mr. Jacob, ancestor of the Jacobs of Tockenham. Lady Honora (O'Brien) widow of the third Sir Francis Englefield, Bart., married secondly Sir Robert Howard, sixth son of the first Earl of Berkshire. He was Principal Secretary to Lord Clifford the High Treasurer, and was living here 1673. An engraving by Faithorne, 1660, of a Sir Francis Englefield, was sold at Sir Mark Sykes's Sale in 1824, for £48 6s. About 1682 Fastern became the property and residence of Laurence Earl of Rochester, second son of Lord Chancellor Clarendon. The house is now a farm-house and contains among other relics of former dignity a carved chimney-piece on which is a shield with the arms of Englefield, Barry of six G. and A. on a chief O. a lion pass. MALMESBURY HUNDRED.¹

ASHLEY.

BELONGED to the Dutchy of Lancaster, and was by Queen Elizabeth given to one of her Mayds of Honor, to buy her pins. It is a pleasant place, and worth ... per annum.

Sir Theobald Gorges. He lies buried in the Church, but without any remembrance of him; nor is there anything of antiquity.

STERKELEY is a very small hamlet in the parish of Great Somerford. The two Law-days of this Hundred were held here (why, is not known) on Hockday (Tuesday after Easter, sometimes the second Tuesday) and St. Martin's (November 11th). This Hundred included Christmalford, Dautesey, Brinkworth, Great and Little Somerford, Seagry, Rodbourn and Corston, Draycote, Stanton St. Quintin, Hullavington, Norton, and Easton Piers (in the Parish of Kington St. Michael). For some curious proceedings before a Jury at Sterkeley Hundred Court in 1189, see Abb. Placit. pp. 13 and 15.

CHEDGELOW, or Chedda's low. Hlæw in Anglo-Saxon means, tumulus, and Hleo, abode. These words gave names, sometimes to Hundreds; as Totman's-low (Tateman's-hlæw) co. Stafford, and Oswald's-low, co. Worcester: or to places, as Taplow (Tappe's-hlæw) co. Bucks, and many others. Shire Courts were held on the spot, in the open air. Cwichelme's Low (now Cuckamsley) on a high hill in Berks was the rendezvous of a Shire Court in the eleventh century, one of whose extremely important Acts is on record. See "Kemble's notices of Heathen Interments," Archæol. Journal, xiv. 131. The actual place called Chedgelow was probably that which is now called "Church-leaze," a farm in the parish of Crudwell: (which see). The Hundred included Sutton Benger, Brokenborough, Newnton, Charlton, Crudwell, Kemble, Oaksey, Pool and Ashley.

In 1274 (3 Edw. I.) the men of the Hundreds presented as a grievance that whereas, whilst the

This is the highest part of the ridge of North Wilts; from whence, as all along this rising, is as pleasant a prospect as any in England, for an inland prospect.¹

¹ Ashley is in the North West corner of Wilts and lies North of the Foss road. The Manor was held in temp. Edw. I. under the Bohuns, Earls of Hereford (a moiety of whose property afterwards merged in the Duchy of Lancaster) by Walter de Ashley, whose heiress brought it to Henry, Baron de Urtiaco or De L'Orti: (miscalled in Sir R. C. Hoare's History of Mere, p. 117, "Sir John de Lortie of Arford"). By what connexion with that family does not appear, but John Mohun, Baron of Dunster was Patron of the Rectory in 1325: his widow, 1330: Ralph de Middelney, 1361, Sir Robert de Ashton or Aston 1364, (who was also owner of Escote near East Lavington; see Edingdon Chartulary). According to a Deed printed in Gent. Mag., 1860, p. 36, Sir Robert Ashton exchanged Ashley for another property at Sutton Veney with Sir Thomas Hungerford of Farley and Heytesbury. According to another Deed in the Hungerford Chartulary, Sir Thomas in 17 Rich. II. (1393) had a release of the Manor and Advowson from John Snapp (Rector of Ashley) and Henry Telesford, both clerks, acting as feoffees of John Langrich and Matilda his wife. It continued in the Hungerford family for about 100 years, and by Mary, heiress of the eldest branch of that family, passed to Hastings Earl of Huntingdon, c. 1500.

According to Aubrey the Crown was owner in temp. Elizabeth. The Lady to whom it was given, was Helen Snachenburg who came over to England in the Suite of the Princess Cecilia daughter of Eric King of Sweden. She became a favourite at Court and married William Lord Parr of Kendal, Brother of Queen Katharine Parr, and Marquis of Northampton. After his death in 1571 she remarried Sir Thomas Gorges of Wraxhall co. Somerset, and (by purchase), of Longford Castle, which house at his wife's instigation and nearly to his own ruin, he rebuilt on the model, it is said, of one near her own country, the Danish Castle of Uranienburg in the Sound. There is a curious monument in Sarum Cathedral, on which are the effigies of the Marquis of Northampton and his Lady: engraved in Sir R. C. Hoare's History of Cawden, pp. 30 and 32. She died 1635, æt. 86. Sir Theobald Gorges, her second son, lived at Ashley: married a daughter of Henry Poole of Sapperton, and died 1647. The Manor continued in his family till about 1740: was then sold to Sir Onesiphorus Paul: and again c. 1776 to the Estcourt family. A survey, taken A.D. 1591, is printed in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. vol. VI. p. 199.

The Advowson was in the Hungerford Family from A.D. 1377. By a benefaction, probably of their first heiress Lady Hastings already mentioned, it belonged in 1554 to the College of St. Mary Newark ("Novi operis") at Leicester. Since, to the Duchy of Lancaster. In the Church (St. James's,) the door on the South side, and the chancel-arch are Norman: the nave arches Early English. Of these, and the Font, a drawing is given in the lately-published first volume of the "Ilam Anastatic Society," 1860. There is also a very narrow aisle, and a small projecting Gloucester. The Church was restored and chancel rebuilt in 1858 by the Rt. Hon. T. H. S. Sotheron Estcourt, Lord of the Manor.

¹ Bremelham, alias Cowage (formerly Colkidge,) near Malmesbury. Britton (Beauties of Wilts. III. 132.) is wrong in saying that this small parish belonged to the Lords Molines and that from them it passed to the family of Hungerford. He appears to have confounded this name with another somewhat similar, viz., Bremelshaw, near Salisbury, which was a Hungerford estate. Bremelham belonged in A.D. 1200, to the Dauntescys of Dautesey: by whose heiress Joan (1420) it passed to Sir John Stradling: was held for life, 1439, by John Dewale third husband of the said heiress, and also, 1465 for life, by William Lygon husband of another Lady Stradling. By Anne the heiress of the Stradlings it came to Sir John Danvers with the Dautesey property. In 1654 part of the Danvers estates had vested by descent in Sir Henry Lee of Ditchley, one of whose two coheirs, Anne, married Thomas fifth Baron Wharton. Bremelham was part of her share. In 1760 the Rushout family were owners, and the church is still in their gift. The Manor now belongs to Mr. Holford of Weston Birt. The Parish Registers before 1813 are lost.

² The Danvers family of the adjoining parish of Dautesey had not much interest in Brinkworth. A tenement called "Jones's" with seventy acres was held under them, as of their manor of Lea and Cleverton. The Hungerfords, who held this on lease in 1641, had also a freehold of their own called "Weekhurst" in 1659. The principal Manor was given to Malmesbury Abbey by one Leofsi a Saxon nobleman: [New Mon. Malm. No. ix]. After the Dissolution, there was a grant from the Crown (19 Eliz.) to Robert Houlton Esq.: but probably in some way for Sir H. Knevett of Charlton, from whom it has descended to the Earl of Suffolk. The Rectory (according to Hatcher, History of Salisbury p. 721) was given, by the name of "Brykelsworth," to the church of Old Sarum, temp. Hen. I: by the name of "Wrynchemurth," temp. Stephen, for the use of the Master of a school there (ditto p. 724): and in the Charter of Confirmation by Hen. II. (ditto p. 726) it is called "Bryghteles-word." But in 1248 it belonged to Malmesbury Abbey, and so continued till the Reformation. From that time to c. 1732 it was in the gift of the Ayliffes of Grittenham: then in the family of Fox, Lord Holland to c. 1802: now, of Pembroke College, Oxon.

In the upper end of that aisle on the wall is thus, viz.

The Arms [Pl. xvii. No. 299]. Supporters, Dexter, a Wyvern O. Sinister, a Mountain Cat proper. Crest, a Wyverne O.

Between the Church and Chancell is a hole on the right hand, as in most of the churches of these parts, which I suppose was for Confession.

In Grettwood grow naturally sorbe apples or service trees.

GRYTTHENHAM (in Brinkworth)

Anciently belonged to the Abbey of Malmesbury. King Henry 8. was dangerously ill of a Fistula, which — Ayliff, a famous Chirurgicalian at London, cured: for which he had this great Estate given, and I thinke all the rest of his Estate hereabout. This — Ayliff obtayned of the King the Charter to make the Chirurgicalians a Company, and in Surgeon’s Hall is a noble piece of K. H. 8. sitting in his chair, and the Warden, then Ayliff, the first Warden, and Company in their gowns and formalities, doeing their obeisaunce to his Majesty, and receiving the Charter from his Majestie’s Hands. This is a picture of the famous painter, Hans Holbein, the painter to H. the 8., and hath escaped the great conflagration.²

² Of Grittenham House, long the seat of the Ayliffe family, nothing is left but one gable with ornamented chimneys. The estate passed from the Ayliffes to the ancestors of the late Henry Fox, Lord Holland, to whose widow it now belongs.

Mr. Ayliffe could not have obtained the first charter for making the Chirurgeons a Company, as they were incorporated in 1464, 3 Edw. IV. (Stow): but they had subsequent privileges by charters from the Henries and other Kings, which he may have assisted in obtaining. The fine painting, considered to be one of Holbein’s best works, and engraved 1736 by Bernard Barton,

This coat [Pl. xviii. No. 300] was graunted to SIR JOHN AYLIFF of this place, Sheriff of London, per Thos. Howley, Clarendieux, 3 Ed. VI.

BROKENBOROUGH.

Here was the Seate of King Athelstan, which the inhabitants still show.¹ It is prettily seated on the promontory of a little hill, like Malmesbury, or as the Roman forts many times are. The River embraces it in the figure of an horse-shoe. The Toft is called Goldhill. It was square, and one of the sides is sixty paces.

Brokenborough is now parcell of the Earl of Berkshire's estate.

still belongs to the Company, and is in good preservation in the Court Room at Barber-Surgeons' Hall in Monkwell Street. Mr. Pepys (29th August 1668) thought of offering £200 for it, "it being said to be worth £1000: but it was so spoiled by the Fire of London that he had no mind for it." It is engraved also in "Knight's London:" and the names of the persons represented are given in Gent. Mag. 1789, p. 290. J. Ayliffe is the second person from the King on his right hand: he has a ring on his finger, and a gold chain about his neck. Stow says, "as many broad pieces have been offered for the Picture as would cover it." Ayliffe's tomb is in the chancel of St. Michael's Basinghall Street. There are Pedigrees of the Ayliffe family in Harl. MS. No. 1165, folio 28: and No. 1443, folio 16^b.

¹ The authority for this was an old Chronicle found in Malmesbury Abbey and partly copied by Leland. [Collect. III. 158.] It states that the original town now called Malmesbury, having been destroyed, its site had become occupied only by a strong-hold called Ingelbourne Castle, under shelter of which, Maidulph a Scotchman, flying from the disturbances of his own country, established a school, the germ of the future Abbey; but that the Christian as well as Pagan population were settled chiefly at Caidurburgh afterwards called Brokeburgh, and that there the Saxon King of Wessex lived. When King Edwin (A.D. 982) gave Brokenborough to Malmesbury Abbey, the grant certainly included, as part of Brokenborough Manor, large estates at Corston, Rodbourne, Cowfold, (Cole-park) all now forming part of the parish of Malmesbury, Bremelham and part of Grittenham. [See New Monasticon, Malmesbury Charters, No. ix.] These places appear to be included under the one name of Brokenborough in Domesday Book. The same fact also appears in a Perambulation of Forests. It is therefore not unlikely that the central residence may have been here. The peasantry have a tradition that "Brokenborough is a 100 years older than Malmesbury." In Mr. J. Y. Akerman's valuable Paper on the possessions of Malmesbury Abbey, Archæol. xxxvii. p. 266, is a copy of the Grant of Brokenborough. The limits include a considerable tract far beyond those of the present parish. The origin of the name is uncertain. "To tham breocan beorge" (to the barrow broken into), alluding to some violated tumulus, is a common mark in old boundaries. In O'Connor's catalogue of the Stowe MSS. now Lord Sherborne's, vol. II. p. 225, is "A copy of the Customs of the Manor of Brokenborow, A.D. 1750."

Mem. Mrs. Dorothie Tyndale (of the Priory, Kington St. Michael) told me, that the howse where my Lord lives was not the seat of King Athelstan; his Palace was much bigger, as by the ruins may appear, not farre off from my Lord's house.¹

In the Church, before the warres, they say were very fine windows, now utterly defaced: an old man told me that his Father, who dyed twenty-four years since, was 110 at his death, and remembred in the tyme of the old lawe, eighteen little bells that hung in the middle of the Church; the pulling of one wheel made them ring, which was done at the Elevation of the Host.²

Here is a very great Barne; but one was pulled downe since the warres much greater. Here was an old farne house, moated, and two ponds.

Mem. This Countrey was anciently a delicate Campania, all ploughed fields as about Sherston: much have been enclosed since my tyme, and more and more will every day: so now lesse barnes serve the turne.

This Countrey is altogether upon a Stone-brash, and very natural for Barley. When I was a boy, wheate was very scarce; then was baked twenty bushells of barley to one bushel of wheate; now they have altered the course of husbandry,—how wisely I cannot say, I something doubt,—and spend 20 bushells of wheat to one of barley.

CHARLTON.

This was the Seate of the Lord Abbot of Malmesbury.

See at Mr. Water's howse which was the Grange, by the Church, if the Arms of Malmesbury Abbey is to be found there. It was at Dr. Lambert's in Sarum, as also the Arms of Wilton and Glaston Abbey, &c. now lost, being taken down by Mr. Eires the Minister.

In Charlton Church the windows all new. Nothing to be found of concernment, but a great monument without any Inscription of S^r. Henry Knevet who married Isabel daughter and sole heir of Sir James Stumpe of this place.

² This paragraph is also crossed by the pen.

This Sir Henry Knevett had some command at the Invasion in 1588, and shortly after his returne home died of a Feaver he gott there. From Mr. Thomas Hobbes.¹

(Sir Henry left three daughters and coheirs. 1. Katharine, who married Lord Thomas Howard afterwards created Earl of Suffolk, whose second son was created Earl of Berkshire. 2. Elizabeth, wife of Thomas Clinton, third Earl of Lincoln :

¹ Charlton with its Tithes and Chapel was one of the earliest grants, A.D. 681, to Malmesbury Abbey. In temp. Hen. VIII. one Robert At Water was Tenant of the Abbot's Demesne Lands: probably an ancestor of "Mr. Water" whose house Aubrey speaks of. Sir Henry Long of Draycote was at that time Hereditary Keeper of Charlton Wood. At the Dissolution of Abbeys, Charlton was purchased by Mr. William Stumpe of Malmesbury, whose son Sir James Stumpe was Sheriff of Wilts 1551, and married Bridget daughter of Sir Edward Baynton of Bromham. Their only daughter Elizabeth married Sir Henry Knyvett, of a Cornish family, afterwards of co. Norfolk. She died 14th July, 1585, and was buried at Charlton. If, as Hobbes the Philosopher of Malmesbury told Aubrey, Sir Henry Knyvett died of a fever caught in 1588, the fever must have lasted a long time, as he did not die until 1598. See the account of his Funeral in Topographer and Genealogist, I. 472.

The monument of Sir Henry Knyvett and his wife is still standing, between the chancel and the North Aisle. The figures are on a raised tomb under a canopy supported by ten Corinthian columns. The Shield of Arms is drawn in Pl. xvii, No. 301. Many of the quarterings were incorrectly copied by Aubrey in his MS.: and are here rectified both from the monument itself and from the Banner used at his funeral. [See Topographer and Genealogist, above referred to.] The Crest is a demi-dragon, wings azure. Some of the quarterings appear also on the Tomb of Thomas, Lord Knyvett (1622) at Stanwell, co. Middlesex: and to a few of them are assigned, in the description of that monument in the Gent. Mag. 1794, p. 313, names different from those given here; as, to quartering 7, Isley, to 10, Burghersh, 11, Blondeville, 15, Hovill, 18, Freville, and 19, Stapleton. There are a few notes relating to Charlton Church by Carter the architect in Gent. Mag. 1802, p. 825, and 1806, p. 211. The capitals of the pillars in the nave, and the Font, are Norman. The Registers commence 1660.

The present Charlton House was commenced by the first Earl of Suffolk who married the heiress of Knyvett; was continued by Henry, Earl of Suffolk and Berks, temp. George III: and left unfinished 1799. Of the Earls of Suffolk there is a detailed account in "Napier's History of Swyncombe and Ewelme" p. 415.

Dryden the Poet married Lady Elizabeth Howard, eldest daughter of the first Earl of Berkshire. Charles their eldest child was born here in 1666. An account of a curious accident that befel him in the Park is printed in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. III, 377. Dryden himself frequently came here for fishing, and he dates his "Annus Mirabilis" from Charlton, 1667. Mary Davis, a person of notoriety about the Court of Charles II., is said to have been born at or near the village. See Notes and Queries, New Series, vol. V. 208, and Pepys's Journal.

and 3, Frances, who married first Sir Wm. Bevill, and secondly Francis Manners 6th Earl of Rutland. Ed.)¹

Etymol. Perhaps Crud-well, from turning milk into crud.²

This place, like the rest on the border of Gloucestershire, enjoys the pleasant prospect of part of the vale foreshortened, terminated with the blue hills towards Salisbury Plaine.

In this parish are several Barrows. Q. their names. There is a Hamlet called Chedslowe, near to which place is a Barrow or two.

Mem. LOWE in old English is the same with Tumulus, or Barrow; so this is as much as Cheddæ Tumulus.³

Another paragraph in the original MS. about the daughters of the first Earl of Suffolk, is also omitted, on account of its inaccuracy. Aubrey says that Lady Viscountess Purbeck (daughter of Sir John Danvers the Regicide) told him that three daughters were married all in one day, which may have been the case; but he gives their names incorrectly. They were 1, Elizabeth wife first of William Knollys, Earl of Banbury, and secondly of Lord Vaux. She is mentioned among Ballard's Learned Ladies. 2, Frances, wife of Robert Devereux, Earl of Essex, from whom she was divorced. Her second husband was Robert Carr, Earl of Somerset. Of this Lady there is an engraving by Simon Pass, which H. Walpole calls "a curious print of a curious person," (Anecd. V. 51). The third daughter Katharine married William Cecil, second Earl of Salisbury.

² Not a satisfactory "Etymol." In the old Malmesbury Abbey Charters the name is spelled Crede-well, and Credan-well: probably from some person's name.

³ Of the barrows one or two are left. That at Chedgelowe itself, has been (so the writer was informed on the spot) "hauled away to fill up quarries." The field is still called Barrow field. It has been already mentioned (p. 206,) that Chedgelow used to give the name to a Hundred: and that the name has now been metamorphosed into "Church Leaze."

Crudwell did heretofore belong to the Abbey of Malmesbury, now to the Lord Lucas, who this year 1670 is building of a very fine Schoole-house, and endowes it with twenty pounds per Annum revenue. ARMS of JOHN LORD LUCAS. [Pl. xviii. No. 302.]¹

The church is good, and hath been adorned very well with good windows which are much defaced.²

¹ Forty hides of land here, including "Eastcot-town, Hanekyn-town (Hankerton) and Morecot-town (Morecot) were of the gift of King Æthelwulf to Malmesbury Abbey: which in 40 Edw. III. had a further gift from William Camme. In the Cartulary of the Monastery are several Deeds relating to Crudwell.

The Abbot also presented to the Rectory. The first Presentation after the Dissolution was by John White Esq. 1554. In 1599 Sir Thomas Lucas was Patron and Lord of this Manor. He was the eldest brother, (by the same mother, but born before marriage), of Sir John and Colonel Sir Charles Lucas; all three distinguished supporters of the Crown in the Civil Wars. Sir Charles was shot at Colchester by Sir Thomas Fairfax after the surrender of the Town. Sir John was created Baron Lucas of Shenfield co. Essex in 1644: but dying without issue male, the Barony went, by the terms of the creation, to his illegitimate brother Sir Thomas and his issue male; in whom it became extinct in 1705. The only daughter and heiress of Sir John married Anthony Grey, eleventh Earl of Kent. She was created Baroness Lucas of Crudwell; which title was vested in her descendant by female lines, the late Earl De Grey. He was owner of the greatest part of the Parish of Crudwell, but not of the Advowson, that having been sold off some years ago to the Father of the present Rector Mr. Maskelyne. There is a portrait of Sir Charles Lucas by Hobson, at Corsham Court: and a Memoir of him by the late Earl De Grey privately printed 1845.

In 2 Hen. IV. Sir John Roches had an estate lying in Crudwell, Escote and Chedgelow, which in Edw. VI., belonged to the Baynton family.

The School is a large square house opposite the Parsonage, and it has the endowment above-mentioned. The Parliamentary Returns of 1786 mention also a Benefaction by "the Duke (the Earl) of Kent or his son."

² The Church is dedicated to All Saints. It consists of a Nave and Chancel, with Aisles North and South of the whole length of the Church itself. In the South Aisle are good Perpendicular Windows. That on the North is older and more dilapidated. The Tower is at the West end, flanked by the Aisles. It is of bad stone and wants rebuilding. Of the four-light stained glass window in the North Aisle three parts are left, but much mutilated. When perfect it represented the seven Romish Sacraments. It is still possible to distinguish, Baptism, Confirmation, Marriage, Orders, and Extreme Unction: also the Figure of Our Saviour. Of the inscription to Dow (carpenter or smith,) mentioned by Aubrey, the single word Johannes remains: also the two coats of Arms, but all turned wrong side out by the glazier. Aubrey's remark about the possessions of

In the North window are the two Coats, (No. 303, HUNGERFORD of Down Ampney, with a mullet for difference. And No. 304.)

Hungerford's coate in this country is a kind of Parietaria that flourishes on every wall; so great possessions they anciently had hereabouts; and their tenants set up the Coat honoris ergo. A great deal this family yet enjoys.

The window aforesaid is entire. It hath four columns (lights): "Extrema Unctio:" "Confessio," &c. In the Limbe (edge) "Orate pro aia Johannis Dow fabri et Johanne uxoris ejus, et filior' suor'."

Here are the best and most substantial seats that I know anywhere, built by one Walton whose name is expressed in a rebus in carved work thus [No. 305].

Quære, when the Revell here?¹

Here hath been a great Mannor-house whereof a great gate remains still. Here the Hungerfords is just, but is made mal à propos at Crudwell, where (so far as the Editor is aware) they had no property. Probably they were contributors to the window, or patrons of John Dow the donor.

In the Gent. Mag. 1806, part i. p. 210, are some Church notes of Crudwell, but with inaccuracies. In E. H. Relton's "Sketches of Churches," 1842, part I. is a view of the Church: and a drawing of some of the carved panels.

Thomas Walton's "Rebus" has disappeared. He had the Manor of Escote in this parish in 4 Eliz. (1561) and married Margaret, daughter of John Earle of that place: was a Justice of Peace 1576, and farmed the Rectory here. His only daughter and heir Margaret was wife of Edward Poole of Poole. See Pedigree of Walton, Wilts. Visit. 1623. Of the Earles there are several memorials in the Church. Thomas son of William 1617. Thomas 1637. Thomas (clerk) and Anne 1664 and 1693. Thomas (son of Thomas Earle of Crudwell, Mercer) 1715.

George Ingram, Rector of this parish from 1718, and Vicar of Hankerton from 1723, was Canon of Windsor and Prebendary of Westminster. In 1761 he succeeded to the title of Lord Ingram, Viscount Irwin of Scotland, and of Temple Newsam near Leeds. He died 1763, having been the fifth brother of one and the same generation, to whom the title descended. There are two gravestones in the Chancel marked T. I. 1671; and N. I. 1675, said to be for Thomas and Nicholas Ingram.

"At the great "Smith Festival" held in Draper's Hall, London, a century or two ago, where all from the President to the Waiters were of that name, the Hall was decorated with flags emblazoned with three Turks' heads, "Purchased by Smith of Crudwell's famous deeds." [Notes and Queries 1854, p. 463.]

DAUNTESEY.

(Manor.)²

Here is a stately Parke with admirable oakes: the ground too, good. The meadows and pastures here are famous at Smithfield Markett: no better fattening ground in England.

Idovers. Rich meadows watered by the Avon. In Welsh, "wy douer" means vagus fluvius (winding stream.) So here the river.³

² Walter de Pavely, Lord of Westbury, Wilts, was lord of this Manor in A.D. 1315 (Nom. Vill.). After him, it belonged successively to the families of 1. DAUNTSEY. 2. STRADLING. 3. DANVERS. From the first, it passed about A.D. 1420 by an heiress Joan to the Stradlings; and about A.D. 1500 from them by their heiress to Danvers, in whom it remained to the death of Sir John Danvers the Regicide, A.D. 1655, when it was forfeited to the Crown.

³ "Ydor" British for river, is one of the words mentioned by Giraldus Cambrensis as showing a likeness between British and Greek. In Greek "ὕδωρ, Water. [Leland's Collect. III. 81.] The name of "Ydouer" was therefore originally that of the stream itself, from which it has been transferred to the land upon its banks. In Hen. III. Roger de Dantesey held in Tydover (i.e. th' Idover) a Knight's Fee under the Honour of Wallingford.

The name of Dautesey, or as written in the oldest Episcopal Register Dauteseye, is a corruption from the Anglo-Saxon "Damic's Eye." The Anglo-Saxon word Eig, or Ige, means land enclosed by water. "Ireland's Eye" is a well known island off the Dublin coast. An Ey-ot (pronounced eight) is a little island. Damic's Eye was the land bounded by water belonging to a Saxon proprietor called Damec. In the "Boundaries of Dautesey" recited in a Deed of A.D. 850 the original forms of both the local names now explained, occur: "A loco qui vocatur Damic's Eye," . . . "ad riculum qui dicitur Ydouere." See Mr. J. Y. Akerman's Article, on the Possessions of Malmesbury Abbey, Archæol. xxxvii. p. 262.

He and she are drawne at length, he in armour with sword and dagger. (At the Lady's head, the shield of DAUNTESEY, as before in No. 313. At the husband's, that of RUSSELL, No. 314.)²

¹ SMITHCOTE in the Parish of Dautesey was held under the Barony of Castle Combe in A.D. 1162 and 1250 by the Dautesey Family. On the partition of the estates of Giles Lord Badlesmere among his four sisters and coheireses in the year 1339, it fell to the share of Matilda wife of John de Vere, Earl of Oxford. Another of the coheireses married Edmund Mortimer, Earl of March, from whose Record of the Badlesmere estate the extract in the Text was made by Aubrey. [See Mr. P. Scrope's History of Castle Combe, p. 73.]

There was a Chapel of St. Anne at Smithcote, to which the Dauteseys presented. The names of nine of the Chaplains are preserved in the "Wilts. Institutions." The last is that of William Ramsbury appointed A.D. 1443.

² This incised alabaster (not freestone) slab bears the effigy of the Lady on the dexter, and the Esquire on the sinister side. Upon her shield are the Arms of Dautesey only. On his the chevron ermine is just traceable: but the cross crosslets are worn out. Part of the inscription, and the dates, are also effaced. It is the oldest monument in the Church; being that of JOAN DAUNTESEY (the heiress, by whom the estate passed to the Stradlings,) and JOHN DEWALE Esq. her third husband. The Arms at the sinister corner, at the head of the Esquire, are those of one of the families of Russell, and seem to relate to Sir Maurice, the former husband named in the inscription round the margin. Two things are remarkable on this gravestone. 1, It gives the

(2. The STRADLING Family.)

Anno; Here was a Robbery committed at the Mannour howse, on the family of the Stradlings: he (i.e. Sir Edward), and all his servants, except one plowboy who hid himself, were murthered: by which meanes, this whole estate came to Anne his sister, and heire. She married after to Sir John Danvers a handsome gentleman, who clapt up a match with her before she heard the newes, he, by good fortune lighting upon the Messenger first. She lived at that time in Pater-Noster Rowe at London, and had but an ordinary portion. This Robbery was donne on a

Arms of the first husband (Russell) who is not buried here: and 2, there is no allusion, either in the inscription or Arms, to her second husband Sir John Stradling. Her first husband (Russell) was dead before 1420 when she succeeded as heir to her brother Walter at Dautesey: for, by documents quoted in Mr. P. Scrope's Castle Combe, p. 219, she was in that year the wife of Sir John Stradling. Sir John's death was probably about 1435 or 6, as he presents to Dautesey Rectory (jure uxoris) in 1432, and to Bremelham 1433; but in 1437 the Presentation to Bremelham runs in the name of herself only. [Wilts. Inst.] Her third marriage must have been about 1438, as in 1439 John Dewell Esq. and Joan his wife present to Bremelham. She kept her second husband's name, and in 1454 was surviving as "Lady Stradling late wife of John Dewale."

The brother to whom Joan was heiress, was Sir Walter Dautesey Knight. In his Will, dated 26th August, 1420, "he desires to be buried before the Altar of St. Mary in the Parish Church of Dautesey. He had property in Dautesey, Smythcote, Merdene, Willesford and Wynterburne-Dautesey. Thomasia his wife. William Gore his steward. Five poor men or women to be maintained in an Alms-house at Dautesey for ever, to pray for his soul: to have sixpence a week each, and to be established in the Alms-house by Michaelmas after the date of his Will. Edmund his uncle: William Hankford K^t, Thomas Dru, Wm. Gore, and Thomas Felix, Parson of Little Somerford, his Exors. To Dautesey Church a Missal, a Gradual, and a Chalice: and some vestments." A copy of the Will in Latin is printed in Hoare's History of Alderbury Hundred, p. 83.

¹ Lady Purbeck, was by birth Elizabeth, eldest daughter of the Regicide Sir John Danvers. She was wife of Robert Villiers, the alleged son of John, Baron Villiers and Viscount Purbeck. In 1660 Robert Villiers, Viscount Purbeck, renounced his aristocratical honours by legal surrender of them to Charles II., fled from his creditors and died at Calais 1674. His widow on her return to England resumed the title of Viscountess Purbeck, thinking it would advance her son's interest.

Saturday night; the next day the Neighbours wondered none of the family came to Church; they went to see what was the matter, and the Parson of the parish very gravely went along with them, who, by the boy (i.e. the concealed plough-boy) was proved to be one of the company, and was, I think, hanged for his paines.¹

¹ Of this story the Editor has never been able to meet with any other written account whatsoever, nor in any of his researches relating to Wiltshire has he ever seen even the most remote allusion to it. The tradition however still lives in the parish of Dauntesey; not only vivens, but vivax: though probably now as unlike the original truth, as any tale could well be, that has been flitting from village-mouth to mouth for nearly 400 years. The popular version at present seems to be that the Father had gone to Parliament and had left his wife and son under the Parson's charge; that he and the Parish Clerk committed the murder, as they thought, undetected, but the plough-boy, hidden in the oven, saw and told; that the Parson's name was Cuthbert: and that he was starved to death in a cage on a gibbet in the field close by the Parsonage. As to the Parish Clerk, (entitled of course, professionally, to a less exalted position,) him they bury alive, with his head above ground. All this however presents nothing in aid of Aubrey's story. No such name as Cuthbert appears, either in the list of Incumbents of Dauntesey, or in the general Register of the Clergy of Wilts about the period. The person who seems to have been Rector of Dauntesey when the crime was committed, was John Jones who was appointed in 1465, and who vacated the living by death in 1503. [Wilts. Inst.] For, though the exact year of the murder is not given by Aubrey, it must have been towards the year 1500: as Sir Edward Stradling, the murdered man, is known to have been still in his minority in 1485, and the first Presentation to the Rectory of Dauntesey made by his successors the Danvers family, was on the death of John Jones, in 1503.

The house in Paternoster Row, where the Lady was staying at the time of the murder, was probably the Town-house of her family, inherited by them from the previous heiress Joan Dauntesey: for the Inquisitions post mortem mention that Sir John Dauntesey, who died 6 Hen IV. (1404) had obtained by marriage with a daughter and heir of John Beverley, sundry houses in the Parish of St. Michael ad Bladum (corn). The Church, afterwards known as Michael le Querne, formerly stood at the corner where Paternoster Row joins Cheapside. Though Aubrey says that Sir John Danvers "clapt up the match" with the heiress of the Stradlings before she heard the news, it is not unlikely that his attention had been called that way before, as, during her brother Sir Edward's minority, the Stradling family were (in 1485) under the guardianship of Henry Danvers, probably of Cothorp, the head of the House of Danvers. [Ians. MS. 260, p. 117.]

But in the chancel, on the ends of some of the seats, in place of what are called “poppy-heads,” there are wooden shields, in which the dexter is, in some, the shield of Danvers, in others, a large A: the sinister, the Arms of Dauntesey. It is to be observed, that instead of using her own family arms, viz. those of Stradling, this Lady uses on her tomb, those of the more ancient family, the Daunteseys, whose heiress Joan had brought the estate in marriage to Sir John Stradling about 1420, as mentioned in p. 216, note 2.

¹ By "Old Sir John Danvers" Aubrey means, not the first of the name, who married Anne Stradling, and died 1514, but his great grandson the Sir John Danvers, senior, who died 1594; called senior, to distinguish him from one of his three sons, who were Sir Charles, Henry Lord Danby, and Sir John Danvers junior, the Regicide. The original coat of Danvers was, Gules, a chevron between three mullets Or, (as in No. 317). In lieu of it the earlier members of the family adopted, for a time only, the Arms brought in by a match with an heiress, called by Aubrey, Branchester, by others, Sindlesham [See Harl. MSS. 6594, f. 12: and Harl. MS. 260, f. 121.]: viz., Arg. on a bend Gules, three martlets Or, (which Aubrey calls poppingays). This adopted coat was in its turn dropped by the Sir John Danvers (died 1594) who re-assumed the original one. His son the Earl of Danby also used the original one, both by itself and quarterly with the arms of his mother, Neville, on shields both inside and outside Dauntsey Church. The Tower, as appears by an inscription over the chancel arch was built in 1630; the Church was restored 1632: both no doubt by the Earl. The doorway (South side) has Early Norman shafts.

George Herbert of Bemerton, having been in the first year of his age in 1594 when Sir John Danvers senior died, could only have known his character by report. The younger Sir John Danvers (the Regicide) married, for his first wife, George Herbert's mother, then widow of Richard Herbert of Chelsea. Aubrey says (Lives, II. 355,) that "she was old enough to have been Sir John's mother, but that he married her for love of her wit. The Earl of Danby was displeased with him for this disagreeable match." George Herbert married a relative of his step-father, viz., Jane, third daughter of Charles Danvers Esq. of Baynton, and resided for a year or two after marriage, at Dauntesey. Izaak Walton has a romantic story about George Herbert's wife Jane Danvers having fallen in love with him upon the strength of his virtuous and simple character, before seeing him, and that she married him after three days sight. This may have been so; but it seems strange that they should never have even seen each other before, considering that Jane's near relative Sir John Danvers had been at the very time for 16 years the husband of George Herbert's mother.

Of Sir Charles and Sir Henry Danvers (Earl of Danby) some particulars are given in the narrative of the Murder of Mr. Henry Long, in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag. Vol. I. p. 306. Of Lord Danby, Aubrey says (Natural History of Wilts., p. 78) "He was born at Dauntesey 28th day of June A.D. 1573. He was of a magnificent and munificall spirit, and made that noble Physic-Garden at Oxford" (the gate-house designed by Inigo Jones, built by Nicholas Stone) "and endowed it with I thinke £30 per annum. In the epistles of Degory Wheare, History Professor of Oxford, in Latin, are severall addressed to his Lordship that doe recite his worth." (Prior has also some verses on the Earl's liberality to the Botanic Garden). "He allowed £3000 a year for his kitchen only. He bred up severall brave young gentlemen and preferred them; e.g., Colonel Legge and several others, of which enquire further of my Lady Viscountess Purbeck. The estate of Henry Earle of Danby was above £11000 per annum: near twelve."

D. Lloyd says of him; "He was called, by the Earl of Nottingham, at 25 years of age the best sea-captain in England. Baron of Dauntsey at 30. His instalment as K.G. the greatest solemnity ever known in the memory of man. The composition for his large estate is the greatest in the whole catalogue, being £21597 6s. not abating the odd twopence." [Memoirs.]

A fine full length portrait of the Earl of Danby by Vandyke, from Lord Orford's collection, now belongs to W. H. H. Hartley Esq. of Lye Grove.

Lord Clarendon's account of the youngest of the three brothers, Sir John Danvers the Regicide, is not prepossessing. Speaking of the King's trial he says "The two men who were only known to the King before the troubles were Sir Harry Mildmay, and Sir John Danvers, the younger brother and heir of the Earl of Danby. He was a Gentleman of the privy chamber to the King, and being neglected by his brother" (Lord Danby) "and having, by a vain expense in his way of living, contracted a vast debt, which he knew not how to pay, and being a proud, formal, weak man, between being seduced and a seducer, became so far involved in their counsels, that he suffered himself to be applied to their worst offices, taking it to be a high honour to sit upon the same bench with Cromwell, who employed and contemned him at once: nor did that party of miscreants look upon any two men in the kingdom with that scorn and detestation, as they did upon Danvers and Mildmay." [Book xi. p. 235, 8vo. 1826.]

In the "Division of Plunder" by the self-denying Republicans A.D. 1646 is the following. "Sir John Danvers, Colonel. After the death of his brother the Earle of Danby, he proved him to have been a malignant, and by Parliamentary proceedings overthrew his brother's Will, outed his sister Gargrave and Sir Peter Osborne of the estate, and hath it." (For full particulars of Sir Richard Gargrave of Nostel, co. York, husband of Katharine Danvers, who "could once ride on his own land from Wakefield to Doncaster: but was at last reduced to earn his bread by travelling with pack-horses," see Hunter's South Yorkshire, II. p. 213.)

In this County Sir John Danvers lived at West Lavington, where he indulged the costly taste for ornamental gardening, of which Aubrey gives an interesting account in his Natural History of Wilts, p. 93. His eldest son Henry, on whom his uncle the Earl of Danby had settled the greater part of his estates, died, vita patris, in 1654. Before his death Henry made some of them over to Trustees, to pay his father's large debts, the balance to go to his (Henry's) sister Ann, afterwards Lady Lee. Sir John died at Chelsea the 16th, and was buried at Dauntsey the 28th April 1655. Though this was before the Restoration of Charles II. he was nevertheless attainted, 12th July 1661. Much of the property was protected: part was forfeited. The West Lavington estate, (the inheritance of Sir John's second wife Elizabeth Dauntsey) was shared between her two daughters, Viscountess Purbeck and Ann (Lady Lee). See above p. 1. note 2. Fearing that such estates as had been conveyed by Henry, the son, in 1654, might be affected by the attainder, a grant of them was obtained from the Crown 13th December 1661, to Henry Hyde Lord Cornbury, and others, who by another Deed declared themselves Trustees to carry out the son's arrangements. This applied to the Manors of Christmalford, Marden, Hilperton Zouch alias Stourton, Morgan's and Milbourne's in Chitterne, Stock and West Bedwyn, Chelworth, lands called John à Gore in Lavington, the twelfth part of Bradenstoke, the Rectory of Seagry, the Advowsons of Hilperton, Norton (near Malmesbury) and Bremelham; all in co. Wilts: besides property in Northamptonshire and at Chelsea. Some of these were subsequently divided between Lady Lee's two sons-in-law James, 1st Earl of Abingdon, and Thomas, 5th Lord Wharton.

Dautesey was not restored to Sir John's representatives. By Letters Patent 20th September 1662, the Manor of Dautesey, together with the Hundred of Chippenham, was granted to the King's brother, James, Duke of York. The Duke had, by Lady Anne Hyde, four sons who died young: the second of whom, James, born 1663, bore the title of Baron of Dautesey. The Duke succeeded to the throne as James II., in February 1685, and on the 28th August following, the Manor was granted to certain feoffees in trust for his Queen, Mary of Modena, during her life. Five years afterwards, on 12th January 1690 (1 William and Mary), it was again granted by the Crown to Charles Mordaunt then Earl of Monmouth, afterwards the celebrated Earl of Peterborough. On the floor of the chancel within the rails are two slabs: 1. "Lt. Gen. Harry Mordaunt son of Lord Mordaunt, died 5th January 1719:" and 2. Charles Henry Mordaunt Earl of Peterborough and Monmouth, 16th June 1814, æt. 56.

The Funeral ceremonies of this last Earl were conducted on the most expensive scale. The body lay in state in a very large room hung from the ceiling with superfine cloth; eighty wax lights, many of them weighing a pound each, were kept burning. The dress of the body in the coffin was composed of satin and the finest cambric: the coffin, covered with the richest Genoa velvet, and escutcheons of Arms: for the silver-gilt nails alone £85 was charged. The pall gorgeous. The body was placed on a magnificent platform ornamented with festoons of black satin, surmounted with a dome lined inside and outside with rich black velvet, and covered with ostrich plumes. The platform fringed with velvet, and behind it a transparency of the Armorial bearings. Banners and shields round the room, and eight mutes in constant attendance. From the room to the Church is about 20 yards: but the procession, in order to be seen, went a circuit of two miles. It consisted of a hearse, seven coaches and six, a carriage and four for the clergymen, six marshalsmen, eight mutes, two feather-men, eight underbearers, forty six pages and a grand page on horseback bearing the coronet. Nine servants received two suits of clothes each. The undertaker's bill was £3000. The executors Sir E. Antrobus and Mr. Coutts Trotter objected. An action was brought at Salisbury: they paid £2000 into Court. Justice Burrough advised a reference, and Mr. Moore, a Barrister, finally settled the whole cost to be £2568. From the Mordaunt family, Dautesey descended to Mordaunt Fenwick Esq. by whom it was sold a few years ago to Charles W. Miles Esq. and his brother.

Draycote was held by petit Sergeantie, viz. by being Marshall at the King's

² The Manor of DRAYCOTE has passed (since the reign of Rich. I.) through the following hands. 1. St. German. 2. Venuz or Venoir. 3. Cerne. 4. Herynge. 5. Long. 6. Earl of Mornington. In 1196 (8 Rich. I.) Ralph de St. German, and his mother Margaret wife of Ralph de Oaksey, transferred it on payment of fifty marks to Robert de Venuz (of probably a Hampshire family). [Wilts. Fines.] In 1223 (8 Hen. III.) John de Venuz was in debt to the King. [Rot. Lit. Claus. I. pp. 619, 644.] The obligation was assigned by the Crown to Master Henry de Cerne, who appears to have been paid off by receiving from Venuz the Vill and Advowson of Draycote, confirmed to him by Royal Charter dated at Dunstable 20th January 1228. Master Henry de Cerne was an Ecclesiastic, clerk of the King's Chapel, an architect and engineer, and was also employed by the King in embassies to Rome. As a witness to Wiltshire Deeds, he is called Henry de Capellâ. [Proc. of Ant. Soc. IV. p. 18.] Philip de Cerne his brother and heir succeeded to Draycote in 1254 (39 Hen. III.) From him descended Sir Edward de Cerne, who died 1393, and whose effigy with that of his second wife Ellen are in brass on the chancel floor. On the death of Sir Edward's grandson Richard Cerne in 1430 without issue, the heir was found to be John Heryng of Chaldon Heryng, by descent from Anastasia de Cerne, sister of Henry the clerk of the King's Chapel, above-mentioned. Isabella mother of Richard Cerne being still in possession for her life, John Heryng in 1437—8 (16 Hen. VI.) sold his reversionary interest; nominally to William Ryngbourne, really to Robert Long of Wraxhall. See particulars, and pedigree of Cerne, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag. Vol. III. p. 178. Robert Long purchased Draycote for his younger son John, but an eldest son Henry, who had South Wraxhall Manor, dying 1490 without issue, South Wraxhall also came to the younger son. Thus the two were united, and so they continued until the decease of Sir Walter Long in 1610. From John, the son of Robert Long of Wraxhall above-mentioned, Draycote descended through eleven generations in male line direct to Sir James Tilney Long the last Baronet. He died in 1805 at the early age of eleven years, and through the marriage of his eldest sister Catharine with the Hon. W. Wellesley Pole, it is now the property of their son the Earl of Mornington.

By a "Marshal's Lock" Aubrey means a shackle-bolt or fetter-lock for prisoners. That the "petty serjeanty" under which Draycote was held, was that of being "Marshal at the Coronation" seems to be incorrect. Draycote, and Notley (in co. South.) both belonging to the family of Venoir or Venuz, predecessors of the Cernes, were held of the Crown by the nominal service of supplying the "Third Rod of the Marshalsea" in the King's Household: by which is probably meant, supplying one of the vergers or wandbearers to attend upon the Marshal: the Third Rod's post (according to another Record, Test. de Nev. p. 147) being, at "the door of the King's kitchen, [ostium coquinæ]." The Shackle-bolt would accordingly be the emblem of the Assistant Marshal's authority over all marauders or breakers of the peace in that department. In the time of Philip Cerne this tenure was changed into Military service (T. de N. p. 147): but the badge continued to be used by the Longs as owners of Draycote, and may still be seen under their coat of Arms upon the Mill there, as well as on the old monument in South Wraxhall Church. [See above, p. 23.]

“Moun sire Edward Cerne chivaler o Elyne sa femme gist icy : de les queus almes Deux p̄ sa pyte eyt m'ci. Amen.”¹ of Dorset., II, 424) in a stone coffin, are his bones very large and very perfect,” Sir Philip was brother of Master Henry “de Capellâ” the grantee, and probably built Draycote Church, about A.D. 1260.

The coates of armes on this monument are as followeth :¹

West end. No. [320] St. JOHN quartering DELAMERE.² South side. [321] LONG, single. ¹ This fine massive monument stands as described by Aubrey. It very much resembles that of Tropenell in Corsham Church. Sir Thomas Long was grandson of Robert of Wraxhall the purchaser of Draycote. He took part in the expedition against Perkin Warbeck in 1497. His arms as entered in Claudius, C. iii. are Long and Seymour quarterly. His wife was Margery, daughter of Sir George Darell of Littlecote. Of this tomb there is a description with small engravings in Gent. Mag. 1835, p. 591. The heraldry on the tomb seems to have been unscientifically restored at some time since Aubrey described it. Three sides only are visible: the fourth which is plain, is against the wall. By Will, 11th September, 1508, Sir Thomas Long desired to be buried here, bequeathing 20s. to the Church, and "his gown of velvet to make a cope:" also certain lands to maintain an Obit for 20 years: and gifts of money to many neighbouring churches: to his wife a gold ring "that was my Lord St. Amand's."

² Delamere of Nunney, co. Somerset: but how the St. Johns had the right of quartering Delamere, or, how the coat quarterly is found among those of Long, does not appear. Delamere quartering St. John was on the North side of Lord Hungerford's Iron Chapel in Salisbury Cathedral.

⁵ See p. 230, note 3. This coat is a quartering on the shield on Draycote Mill: p. 235 note.

(Sir Henry Long's Monument.)

Sir Henry Long, sonne to Sir Thomas Long, lies buried in the South side of the Chancell, under a plain altar monument, covered with a faire black marble, without inscription.¹

T'was Sr. Henry Long that made that gallant charge at Terwayn² in France, in the sight of King Henry the Eighth, at which time, and for which action, the King did graunt him that new crest, viz. Lyon's head, erased, with a man's hand in the mouth.

In the window by the Pulpit³ is an escutcheon in stone, viz. [No. 334] 1. LONG, quartering, 2. (POPHAM of) Bradley, [with a bezant]; 3. BERKELEY of Bruton. 4. WAYTE. Quære de 2 and 4. Mem: Col. Long sayes that the coate like Popham's is by the name of Bradley: and that Bradley mannor came by that match. Q. de hoc.⁴

In the Arcil window in the hall, these coates:

[No. 337] LONG impaling WROTTESLEY of Staffordshire.

² Terouenne, fifty miles from Calais. In 1513, Hen. VIII. laid siege to this place August 4th. It capitulated on 23rd. Henry then took Tournay and returned to England.

³ Now against a window on the North side of the nave.

⁴ Sir James Long of Draycote in a letter dated 1688 (printed in Kimber's Baronetage, II. 265) says that his family property at North Bradley, had been originally granted to a Reginald de Bradley, Knight, whose heiress his ancestor had married. But there is at present no evidence of this marriage: nor are the Arms which Aubrey calls "Bradley's," (and which he confuses with the shield of Popham), found to be assigned to any family of the name of Bradley.

The Arms which Aubrey doubtfully calls WAYTE are also quartered on the Draycote Mill shield: see p. 235. The usual Arms of Wayte have a chevron between the 3 bugle-horns. Without a chevron it is more like Dodington.

In stone over the Hall chimney, "1574."

Here (at Draycot) is a great deal of vitriol oare. Sir Walter Long about the beginning of King James, digged for silver through blew clay, and got £20 worth, but at £60 charge or better. Here are frequently found petrified periwinkles: also belemnites. The water is not good for tucking or fulling-mills: it tinges the cloath a little yellowish.³

² Leland mentions a Thomas Long "who could skille in the law."

³ Sir James Long invited to Draycote one Mons. Cocks (afterwards Baron Crownstrome,) superintendant of mines in Sweden, then travelling in England, to inspect some ore found in his Park: but the metal was found to disappear in the process of smelting. Aubrey says "I doubt there was a cheat put upon him."

It should not be omitted, that Draycote House was a home to Aubrey in his misfortunes, and that he was on his way thither when he died at Oxford. There are some notices of Draycote in his Natural History of Wilts. A story about the separation of the two properties Draycote and Wraxhall, is given in his "Miscellanies;" and another about the introduction of tobacco-smoking into Wilts by Sir Walter Long, in his Lives of Eminent Men, II. 512. For the former see also "Burke's Romance of the Aristocracy," I. 119. In "Household Words," Saturday, May 6th, 1854, is a curious account of the Death-bed of Charles II., written by a Lady about the Court at Whitehall, and found among papers at Draycote House. EASTON PIERSE.³ (In Kington St Michael.)

Easton-Pierse was anciently a Parish of itselfe. It was a little Mannour; where is a stone shield of Arms: 1. Long. 2. Popham. 3. Seymour, and 4. a lion rampant: Impaling 1. Darell. 2. A horse's head, as No. 326. 3 Stourton, having on a chief, the device, either of a Dray or a Sledge. 4. Wayte? (see p. 232). Above, is the new crest: below, a shacklebolt. It is the coat of Sir Thomas Long (c. 1510) and Margery Darell his wife.

In a field near the Mill, several skeletons and some armour were discovered in 1821. Also a circular stone-ticket inscribed F. VI. (Gent. Mag. 1838, p. 495.) "Sir James Long digging a hole for a post for his parke pale, 1680, found an urne, but did carefully inter the ashes again, I think with the urne" (Aubrey Mon. Brit. MS.) On the Communion Plate in the Church are the arms of LEACH in a lozenge: viz. Ermine, on a chief indented 3 Crowns. Aubrey's friend Sir James Long, who died about 1692, married Dorothy, daughter of Sir Edward Leach of Shipley, co. Derby, Kt.

² There is a Whitechurch, five miles off, beyond Malmesbury, near which is a Farm now called "Quebwell." Aubrey may have confounded that name in some Deed for Cnabwell, or he may have inserted the sentence in this part of his MS. by mistake.

This Mannour butted upon Cotteswold; which is a ploughed campania. And Mem: that fourscore years agoe, (about 1600) from Yatton Keynell town's-end to the Parson's close adjoyning to Easton-grounds, all was common, and Yatton and Easton did intercommon together, and putt in cattle equally.

(Chapel.)

The Chapell was pulled downe about fourtie yeares since (about 1640.) It was but small; and such a turret for two tintinnabulums as at Leigh Delamere, Corston and Brokenborough. The toft where it stood is still called the Chapell-hay, near to the Mannour house. They did bury here.

(Cross.)

At the Crosse way by the Pound, at the entrance into the Lane which heretofore went to Lye Delamer Mannor house, stood the Crosse: a piece whereof is at this (Easton) house a trough: and at Cromwell's the Font-stone serves for cattle to drink.

This soyle brings very good oakes and witch hazles; excellent planke stones.

Old Wm. Kington assures me that his house in the Priory Downe near the spring by the brook, was built long before he was born; that it was built for a Mill for the Nuns of the Priory. Vide the old Deedes in Mr. Hill's hands.

(8. The Lyte Family.)

It is not improbable that the Lytes of Easton may have originally come from Evelton (Yeovilton) which is but 2 miles from Lytes Cary in Somerset. They have held Easton by lease time out of mind, and may have taken their first lease from the De Yeovilton family, (see p. 237.) and might relate to them as Stewards.—Vide the pedegree, if any kindred between Lyte and Yevelton.

Appendix lxi. On 1st January, 17 Eliz. (1575) John Light and Thomas Light of Easton Piers sold the Manor Farm to John Snell, gent., and Thomas Snell his son for £385.

The Mannour House, which was I think, a Graunge to the Abbey of Malmesbury, was for the greatest part re-edified by St. Laurence Washington² about the beginning ¹ The Vill of Garesden was anciently within the bounds of Braden Forest. Tanner (p. 591) refers to two charters, by which Ina, King of Wessex, in A.D. 701, gave to Malmesbury Abbey 45 cassates of land at Gersdun. In the New Monasticon, (Malmesbury, No. xi.) is another charter, by which in 1081, the Manor, Rectory and Patronage, at the request of Abbot Warin, were given to the Abbey by Matilda, Queen of William the Conqueror.

The family of Moody of Westport, Malmesbury, (of which there is a short pedigree in the Wilts. Visitation 1623) was of Worcestershire origin. John Moody of Moody's Place in that county married the heiress of Woldon. His son married a Warneford of co. Wilts, and settled at Westport. The name occurs among the officers of Malmesbury Abbey. The grant of the Abbot's estate to Richard Moody was made in 36 Hen. VIII. (1544). Henry Moody was created Baronet 1621. His son Sir Henry sold the Manor about 1640 and settling in New England, died s. p. about 1662.

² Sir Lawrence Washington who purchased Garsdon from the Moodys, was a second son in the family of Washington of Sulgrave co. Northampton, from the elder branch of which General Washington was descended. [See Pedigree in Baker's Northamptonshire, I, 514.] Sir Lawrence was buried at Garsdon. His Epitaph is as follows. "Sir Lawrence Washington Kt. lately Chief Register of the Chancery, whom it pleased God to take unto his peace from the fury of the insuing wars, Oxon. May 4, here interred 24th A.D. 1643, aged 64. Also Dame Ann his wife died June 13, buried 16th, 1645.

Condere qui tumulo nunc jacet ille pius."

On the Church plate (a flagon, two chalices and salver, all of silver), is engraved "Given to Garsden Church by the Lady Pargiter, formerly wife of Sir Lawrence Washington, who both lie buried here." This plate for many years had been kept in a box and deposited in a lumber closet in the old mansion. There was an idle story in the village that a ghost had formerly been laid in the box: a story that perhaps was useful as a double-lock; for a superstitious dread of disturbing the ghost effectually deterred many from indulging their curiosity by looking into it. Having understood from an old man that there was some Communion Plate at the Great House, the Clergyman made enquiry, and to the utter surprize of the people of the house, upon opening the lid of the box (for the first time perhaps for a century) instead of seeing a ghost jump out, this valuable service of tarnished plate presented itself, and was immediately taken to the Vicarage House. [Letter from Rev. H. J. Newbery, 1822].

It was anciently called Hanekington and did belong to the Abbey of Malmesbury, given by ³

In the Church is not anything of antiquity to be found: the chancell hath been downe above these twenty yeares. The Parish is well enough contented without it, and more thrifty than to re-edifie it, so they have walled up the place of the cancelli.⁴ Very good land and very dirty.

Stonehenge at one time belonged to the family of Washington. The grand-daughter of Sir Lawrence was the heiress of the Garsdon estate. She married Robert Shirley, Lord Ferrars of Chartley, who presented to this Rectory in 1698. Aubrey says, Natural History of Wilts, p. 53, "In Garsden Park now Lord Ferrars's is perhaps the finest hollow oak in England."

¹ The Manor House is a good example of Jacobean Architecture. An engraving of one of the chimney-pieces is given in "The Builder," 1845, p. 126. On it is a shield bearing the Arms of Moody (as in No. 357) quartering Wolfdon (a fess between three wolves' heads). There is also a loose shield of stone bearing Quarterly, 1 and 4, Washington, (Ar. two bars gules, in chief three mullets), 2 and 3, A cross flory between four cinquefoils, (Mercury?). Crest, Washington.

The Earl of Suffolk is now Lord of the Manor: from which the Patronage of the Living has been severed. The Church has been rebuilt, and was re-opened 8th May, 1856.

² This (now gone) was the shield of William Basely Esq. who was Knight of the Shire 1555, and resident here 1565. [Harvey's List of Wilts. Gentry]. He presented to the Rectory in 1553 in right of his wife Katharine Mody, widow of William Stumpe Esq., (son of the Mr. Stumpe who purchased Malmesbury Abbey at the Dissolution). She had a life interest in Garsdon. [See at the Rolls Office an Inq. p. M. taken at Bradford 23rd March, 3 and 4 P. and M. 1556.] Basely, as a Wilts. name, is found at East Knoyle 1587 (Wilts. Subsidy). In 1565 Elys Gore was also of Garsden.

³ It was included with Charlton in the grant by King Æthelwulf to the Abbey.

Frances Howard, wife of Sir Henry Winchcombe of Bucklebury, Berks, and only surviving daughter of Thomas third Earl of Berkshire, left by Will a benefaction charged on an estate formerly "Warnford's."

² Sir John Hoskyns, a friend of Aubrey's often mentioned in his writings, was a Herefordshire Baronet and M.P., a Master in Chancery, one of the first members of the Royal Society, and its President in 1682. He was grandson of Serjeant Hoskyns, often called by Aubrey in his letters, "The Old Serjeant," who was the author of the verses on "The Trusty Servant" at Winchester School. [See Wilts. Archæol. Mag. IV. 108].

³ Aubrey's version of this story (which however has very little to do with Hankerton) is not quite correct. Chaloner the discoverer of the Alum, and Chaloner who signed the warrant for King Charles's death were different persons, Sir Thomas, the father, and Mr. Thomas the son. The facts supplied by the biographies, were these. The father, Sir Thomas, of Guisborough in Yorkshire, born 1559, a man well versed in natural science, travelled abroad, chiefly in Italy;

Mr. R. Boyle tells me that the Salt at Mynty is sea salt mixed with Nitre. He bids me try it again, and hopes well of it, that it may be profitable.

HULLAVINGTON.

The Manor belonged to a House of Friars Alien, subordinate to St. Victor's in France; quære, in Normandy, or Paris. After the Alien Priories had been dissolved by Act of Parliament, King Henry the Sixth gave the Lands of Hullavington, among others that belonged to these Friars, as the Parsonage and Provost's manor at Chalke, to his two Colleges that he erected; viz., King's College in Cambridge, and Eaton College.

and on his return was knighted 1591. Soon after this he discovered at Guisborough the first alum mines ever known in England: large sums of money were spent before the project was brought to bear: but by importing from Holland and France workmen acquainted with the business, it began to succeed: yet very little to the profit of the proprietors, for it was adjudged to be a Mine Royal and came into the hands of the Crown. It was then granted to Sir Paul Pindar, under the following Rents, viz., £12500 a year to the King: £1640 a year to the Earl of Mulgrave and £600 a year to Sir William Pennyman. Notwithstanding these high rents and that no less than 800 persons at a time were employed in the manufacture, this farm of the alum mines produced a great profit to Sir Paul Pindar, who kept up the price at £26 a ton. The Long Parliament voted this a monopoly and restored the alum works to the original proprietors. Sir Thomas Chaloner was however dead before this took place. He had been in great favour with King James and was made governor of the Household to Prince Henry. He died 1615.

Thomas, one of his younger sons, also travelled through France and Italy, and was distinguished for his wit and literary accomplishments. But having contracted a dislike to the Royal Family on the score of the alum mines of which his father had been deprived he joined the malcontent party; was elected M.P. for Aldborough in Yorkshire, and became an active Member of the Long Parliament. He sat as one of the King's Judges and was a Member of the Council of State. On a prospect of the King's return, he went abroad and died in Zealand.

In his "Lives," Vol. II. p. 282, Aubrey gives some anecdotes of Mr. Thomas Chaloner, adding that "he was as far from being a Puritan as the East is from the West; one of Henry Martyn's gang, who loved to enjoy the pleasures of this life: a good scholar, but had only written, about 1652, an anonymous pamphlet called 'An account of the Discovery of Moses's Tomb,' which had set the wits of all the Rabbis to work, and t'was a pretty while before the sham was detected." For the Chaloners, see Young's History of Whitby, II. 826.

This Hullavington belongeth to Eaton Colledge.¹

In the Church is nothing of Antiquity.² There is a plain Tomb of Symon James, who married the daughter and heir of Chatterton.

¹ The town of "Hunlāfing." This name of a Saxon Thane occurs in the Codex Dipl. No. 433.

St. Victor "in Caeto" or at Caux, a few miles North of Rouen, in Normandy, was founded by a Norman Baron, Sir Roger de Mortimer, before the Conquest of England. His son Sir Ralph came over with William I.; and having received a large grant in this part of Wilts, viz., the Fee of Hullavington, Surrenden, and Bradfield, with parts of Alderton, Luckington, and Kington St. Michael's, he endowed his Father's Monastery in Normandy with the Manors of Hullavington and Clatford, (near Marlborough). At the latter place was the Priory Alien or establishment subordinate to St. Victor's. The Prior of Clatford is sometimes called the Prior of Hullavington. He presented once or twice to the Vicarage, but generally the Crown presented for him. After the confiscation of the Alien Priories, King Henry VI. gave both these Manors to Eton College to which that of Hullavington still belongs, being now held in lease under the College, by Sir John Neeld Bart. In the Cartulary of Malmesbury is a Composition between "the Prior and men of Hullavington" with the Abbot. A MS. (No. 268) in Queen's College Oxon. relates to the same subject. Tanner mentions a Bull of Pope Gregory for the augmentation of the Vicarage, as among the archives at Eton.

² He means no ancient monuments. The Church itself is of considerable antiquity. The Porch, Arches, Columns, and other parts are Transition Norman. In the Chancel the East window is a three-light lancet. On the North side, the Bradfield Aisle contains some very good Early English windows of three lights, with Purbeck marble shafts.

Another object of antiquity which Aubrey might have noticed, is a very curious piece of mediæval embroidery, originally a cope, now used as a pulpit cloth. On a brown satin ground are stitched various embellishments worked in gold and silver thread. In the centre is a representation of our Saviour on the Cross, with an angel on each side receiving the blood in a chalice. The rest is covered with figures of Saints, cherubim full of eyes, fleurs de lys, &c. [See Archæol. Journal, I. 330].

Anne Iyve his widdo: in memory of her dear husb: and child, hath erected this monument in the yeare of our Lord God, 1663." ²

² The name of Ivy occurs in documents relating to the adjoining Parish of Alderton so far back as A.D. 1296. Between the years 1560 and 1670 the family was settled at West Kington, at Hullavington (as leaseholders under Eton College), and at the Abbey House, Malmesbury. There are no entries of the name in the Hullavington Registers, which are preserved only from 1694. But there are some gravestone inscriptions, besides the one which Aubrey copied. Thomas Ivy of West Kington (1569) by his wife Eliza Mallett of co. Somerset, was the Father of Sir George, who (as mentioned above p. 86) married a Hyde of West Hatch. Their son Thomas was the father of twenty children; the eldest of whom, George (named in Aubrey's Natural History of Wilts, p. 16) married a daughter of Oliver St. John, was a County Magistrate for fifty years and died æt. 80. They had among other children Oliver, whose wife was Anne Finett, and Colonel Thomas Ivy. The eldest son of the latter, was St. John Ivy, J.P. living 1694. The third son was Sir Thomas Ivy who married one of the family of Stumpe of Malmesbury, and lived at the Abbey House, where, in what is called the Banqueting Room, his coat of arms is still to be seen over the chimney-piece. He made a voyage to Guiana about A.D. 1633: and was buried at Hullavington about 1671—5. [See Natural History of Wilts, p. 81, and Collect. Top. et. Gen. VI. 244]. In Sir John Bramston's Autobiography (pp. 15 and 19, Camd. Soc.) is an unfavourable account of a Thomas Ivy, (husband of Sir John's niece Theodosia Stepkin) who "was knighted after the King's return, but merited whipping rather;" and who was the author of a scarce pamphlet called "Alimony arraigned." He was certainly of this family, but whether he was the Sir Thomas who was buried at Hullavington about 1671—5, is not clear.

The Manor House is near the Church. After the Ivy family, the proprietors were the Jacobs of whom some are buried in the Church.

BRADFIELD (in Hullavington).

It is now in the parish of Hullavington, but it was anciently a parish of itself, and a Mannor. The Chapel stood. The House is of the old gothic fashion, [see plate xxiv.] with the barne within the court, which was the general way of building the Mansion howses of the Lords of Mannors. Quod N.B. ¹Bradfield is between Hullavington and Norton. From the Ecclesiastical shape of its hall-windows it is commonly thought to have been a Priory. But there is no record of monks being actually established here. Nor does it appear to have been, like the Manor of Hullavington, given to the Abbey of St. Victor. The great tithes only belong to Eton College, as the owners of the Advowson. Bradfield appears to have been always a separate property, held (according to ancient notices,) partly under the Mortimers, partly under the Barony of Castle Combe.

The three names set down by Aubrey without remark, "Russell, Collingbourne, Chatterton," are those of successive owners before his time. This family of Russell had lands at Bradenstoke, Quedhampton near Cliff Pypard (held under Castle Combe Barony) and at Lydiard Millicent. The Collingbournes succeeded them by inheritance. In 2 Rich. III. William Collingbourne of Lydiard Millicent and of Bradfield, with others his associates, was indicted for conspiring to bring over from Brittany, Henry, Earl of Richmond: and for devising and circulating hand-bills and verses, to stir the people to commotion; fastening the same upon the doors of St. Paul's Cathedral. The result is well known. "Tristis pœna secuta jocos."

"It stands on record that in Richard's times
A man was hanged for very honest rhymes."

KEMBLE and EWEN.

It stands in a delicate campania, near Cirencester. The parish, or the greater part of it, did anciently belong to the Abbey of Malmesbury. Vide Legier Book, who was the donor, and Quere, to whom the church was dedicated.

Here is a handsome church porch, the moulding and pillars like those of the Cathedrall of Sarum, tempore H. III., but the moulding of the dore goeing into the church is like the North dore of Kington St. Michael.¹

William Collingbourne had two daughters, one of whom married George Chaderton, and had a son Edmund. After Collingbourne's execution his possessions were granted to Mr. Edmund Chaderton, the King's Counsellor and Chaplain. (Harl. MS., 433. art. 1323.) A lady of this Chaderton family appears to have married Simon James, whose epitaph in the North Aisle is given above. His grandson Edmund James was owner in Aubrey's time.

In the North, commonly called the "Bradfield, Aisle" in Hullavington Church, is a small Tablet to William Cole of Bristol who died at Bradfield 1701. He was a writer on Philosophical subjects, and lived here and at Bristol. Aubrey (in another of his MSS.) mentions him as having this estate in right of his wife. He had probably married into the James family. His wife's name was Anne. She survived him only a few weeks, and was buried 4th November, 1701. (P.R.) There are several later entries of the name. Two volumes of Mr. Cole's Letters in MS. relating to points (now obsolete) in Natural Science, written to one of the Southwells of King's Weston, and dated "From my solitude at Bradfield," were sold at the auction of the Brockley House Library (near Bristol) in 1849, and are now in the British Museum, as Nos. 18598—9, Addit: MS. The inscription to him placed in the Church by a grand-daughter is as follows.

"Gulielmo Cole: de Bradfield gen: qui ob: III. Cal. Sept. A.D. MDCCI.
Anna Gilberti Cale gen: fil: Avo materno Beatæ Memoræ Posuit."

Bradfield now belongs to Mr. Hooper of Corston near Bath. Of the chapel, if there ever was one, nothing is left. The portions of the house drawn by Aubrey that are now destroyed are marked with A in our Plate xxiv. There is at the back of it a large pile of irregular building of James I. date, which rises above the rest, but does not appear in the sketch. The stained glass coats of arms have perished.

¹ Kemble is five miles from Cirencester, and seven N.E. of Malmesbury, at the northernmost point of the county of Wilts. The name is spelled Kemele, and Kemelegh, in Anglo-Saxon Charters.

The grant to Aldhelm Abbot of Malmesbury, of an estate at "Kemele," in A.D. 682 by Cedwalla King of Wessex, is printed in the New Monasticon (Malmesbury, No. viii). Kemble Morley was held by Milo de Morlee in King John: in Edw. III. by Roger Normaund, and in Rich. II. by Gilbert le Despencer. [See Wilts. Fines and Inq. p. M.] The Church is dedicated to All Saints. The South Porch was built by William de Colerne, Abbot of Malmesbury about

In the South aisle, in an old gothique nich lies the effigies, in grey marble, of a Chevalier, mailed and crosse-legg'd; at his feet is a wolfe. They say his name was Allam or Hallam, and in this parish is a place yet called by the name of Allam's Court. In his shield is this coate [No. 367].

Mem. A.D. 1408, Rob. Hallam, Cardinall and Chancellour of Oxford, was Bishop of Salisbury; the 49th in number of the Diocese.¹

At Ewen I do not hear of any thing of antiquitie.²

A.D. 1280. The inner door is Norman of c. 1100. These are drawn and described in E. H. Relton's "Wiltshire Churches:" and in the Collections of the Oxford Architectural Society, are some details.

¹ The name of an Earl Halam, "Halamius Comes," occurs in the Grant of Garsdon to Malmesbury Abbey (New Monasticon, p. 259), but the Arms preserved by Aubrey do not correspond with those usually found under the name of Hallam. They resemble more those of Berkeley. In saying that Robert Hallam was the 49th Bishop, Aubrey is reckoning from the commencement, before the severance of Sarum from Sherborne. Of the Bishops of Sarum only, he was 18th. He is called by Somner and others "De Hallam," and when clergymen in those days were so called, it generally indicated the place of birth. Being, in the earlier part of his professional career, Prebendary of York, it is not improbable that he may have been a native either of Hallam in that county, or of another place of the same name in co. Derby. By mentioning him at all under the head of the parish of Kemble, Aubrey would seem to suggest that the Bishop may have been a Wiltshire-man, through some possible connexion with the cross-legged Knight, who, the people told him, was called Hallam. The Bishop was buried in Constance Cathedral A.D. 1417. Of his effigy there is a fine brass of Flemish workmanship. See Mr. E. Kite's Wilts Brasses.

² The proper name is Ewelme (as it is spelled in the Valor Eccl:) from the Anglo-Saxon Ewelme a fountain. It is barbarized into "Yeoing" in Andrews and Dury's map. The lands in this hamlet that belonged to Malmesbury Abbey were given to it by King Athelstan c. A.D. 931. [Monasticon.] A chapel here is mentioned in the Sarum Registers A.D. 1661. In 1226 Godfrey le Berners held under the Abbey, and Richard de Husseburn under him. [Wilts Fines.]

In the Archæologia xxxvii, p. 113, is an account by J. Y. Akerman Esq. of a discovery in 1856 of Anglo-Saxon Remains, with a Map, tracing the ancient boundaries of Athelstan's Grant. See also Gent. Mag. Jan. 1857. Henry Hatcher, the Historian of the Salisbury Volume forming part of Sir R. C. Hoare's Modern Wilts, was born here 14th May 1777. R. Gordon Esq. is now Lord of the Manor.

MALMESBURY BOROUGH.

The Prospect of Malmesburie. [See Pl. xxiv.] I would have another from Thornehill. Mr. Hollar to draw a Mappe of the Towne, with the names of the Rivers that embrace it, the Avon and (Newnton Water), the Prospect of it, the Abbey Church, and K. Athelstan's Monument.

"A very neat town, and hath a great name for cloathing." V. England described by Mr. Edw. Leigh.

Maidulphi Urbs, that is, Maidulph's City; afterwards shortened to Malmesbury. Maidulph's burgh, methinks is too much forced an Etymologie for this place. I believe it rather comes from Malme, which signifies mudd or clay, as well agrees here; so Malmes-hull in Herefordshire, a clayey place.¹

¹ The Church of Lea, with Cleverton, is annexed to Garsdon. The Manor belonged to Malmesbury Abbey. The windows over which Aubrey's eye was wandering during his friend's nuptials may have contained the Arms of that Abbey or of some of the following families. In 13 Edw. III. Ralph de Combe "de la Lee juxtà Malmsbury" surrendered his mother's estate here to Sir John Mauduit Kt. who in the following year settled it on his daughter and heiress on her marriage with Sir John de Molyns. With the heiress of Molyns it passed into the eldest house of Hungerford, and by their heiress to Hastings, Earl of Huntingdon. At the Dissolution, the Tithes were purchased by Richard Moody of Garsdon. From c. 1570 to 1680 a younger branch of Hungerford of Down Amney, were owners of Brill's Court, the "Gothique seat" alluded to: now a farm house, where their Arms still remain, in stone. The Danvers family of Dautesey appear to have been also proprietors. The Rt. Hon. Sidney Herbert, now Lord Herbert of Lea, is Lord of the Manor.

¹ The derivation from malm, a word that has no existence in English Dictionaries, is frivolous. The first religious man who settled on this site was Maildulf, or Maidulf. The Anglo-Saxon name for the town was Mǫldulfes-burh, sometimes written Maldumes, or Maldmes-burh. It is the inevitable fate of long names to be compressed by the vox populi, into the shortest possible space, without the slightest regard to the dignity of their origin. There is another instance, in point to the present case. Off the coast of Laconia in Greece is a small island connected with the mainland by a bridge. In modern Greek it was called Monemvasia (μόνη ἐμβασία, single entrance). It became celebrated for the excellence of its wines. The Italian sailors shortened it to Malvasia, the French to Malvoisie, the English to Malmsey.

¹ This was an older Common Seal. See Moffatt's Malms: p. 132. n. The inscription on the present Seal of the Corporation is "SIGIL. COM. ALDRI. BURGEN. BURGI. DE. MALMESBURY. IN. COM. WILTS. 1615." See Pl. xxiii, No. 368. The proper description of the Arms is: "A castle with an embattled Tower at each end: on the centre a Tower domed, thereon a pennon: on each side of the Castle three ears of wheat on one stalk; in chief, on the dexter side, a mullet of six points, and on the sinister an increscent; again, on the sinister side three balls, one near the dome of the upper tower, and the other two near the battlements of the sinister tower: the base of the escutcheon water." Mr. Edmondson, says that it is painted thus, on a field gules, in the Town-Hall: but that he believes it was never intended as an armorial ensign. [Edmondson's Heraldry, vol. I. Armorial Ensigns of Counties, &c., Letter M.]

² Malmesbury Common: enclosed and allotted by Act of Parliament 8th June 1821. [2 Geo. (The Castle.)

The Castle of Malmesbury was built by Roger, Bishop of Salisbury; he also built the Castle of the Devises, and Shirborne in Dorset; he lived in the time of King Stephen. V. Godwyn and Heylyn.

The Castle stood on the neck of Land between the Abbey and Westport, and by reason of the narrowness there, it could be but a kind of great Gate or Port, and from hence t'is likely West-port takes its name.

The Right Rev. Father Seth Ward, Lord Bishop of Sarum, upon search of the evidences of that See, which he has examined and digested from the beginning to this present time, and which had not been inspected for above a hundred yeares, finds that the Bishops of Sarum had never their See at Malmesbury, as some say.

Aldhelme, the chief of Maidulph's Disciples, being elected his Successor, built there a very fair Monastery, and was himself the first Abbot thereof. He was canonized a Saint, and on his Festival Day (March 31) there was kept here a great Faire, at which, usually, there was a band of Armed Men appointed to keep the peace among so many resorting thither. I never heard of any such thing in my time.¹ Aldhelm was the first of the English Nation who wrote in Latin, and that taught the Englishmen the way how to make a Latin verse.

² Some of his biographers have mistaken these two lines for Aldhelm's own. They are from the beginning of Virgil's Third Georgic written by him at Athens; and they are merely applied by Aldhelm, in his Treatise on Metre, to his own case. As Virgil designed to transport the literary trophies of Greece into Italy, so Aldhelm proposed to introduce the Muses of Italy among his own countrymen.

Insert the Draught of the Abbey from the Monasticon: but t'is ill done. The Abbey Church was built per crucem, in the middle whereof was the Tower, on which, no doubt, as every where else almost in this Champagne Countrie, was a steeple.¹ Here was a great Bell, called St. Aldhelm's Bell, which was rung when it did thunder and lighten, to send the Tempest from the Town into the Country.

Note. St. Aldhelm's Bell was a Telesman, no question: and I believe the same of the great Bell at St. Germain's Abbey at Paris, which they ring when it thunders and lightens. Concerning Telesmens, vide Gaffarel, Heydon's Temple of Wisdome, &c.²

in Ayr, or, as others say, in Ireland. Roger de Hoveden and William of Malmesbury speak of the latter as the person pen-knived by the Greek-detesting youth of Malmesbury, in A.D. 883. He is however said by some to have died abroad. A third and more celebrated John Scot commonly called Duns Scotus, lived long afterwards; dying at Cologne A.D. 1308. Leland names as the scene of this murder "a little Chirch joining to the South side of the Transept," which was still standing in his day, "a very old pece of work:" but filled at that time with the sacrilegious looms of Master Stumpe the great clothier, to whom the Abbey and its Church had been sold. Leland does not exactly say, as Aubrey quotes him, that the statue of John Scot was in the choir: but, "yn Th'abbay Chirch." [Itin. II., p. 53.]

North and South walls of the Choir were partly excavated in January 1853 in the garden of the Abbey House. They were enormously thick, and well put together with gravel and grout. The substratum of the garden appeared to be a complete floor of stone foundation which had been laid down at first over the whole area so as to allow the builders to lay walls upon it in any direction. Some stone coffins were found. In the North Transept outside the garden was dug up a skeleton, in lime, without any coffin. The foundations showed that a wall, as of some other edifice, had abutted against the North wall of the Choir.

² This is described by Leland as square, at the West end of the Abbey Church, and still standing when he visited this town. Britton (Arch. Antiq. Vol. I., Y. 3.) understood Leland to say that it was then occupied as a dwelling-house; but Leland in that passage is speaking of another Tower—that at the West end of St. Paul's, Malmesbury. Judging (from the Ruins), of the general Plan of the Abbey Church, it does not seem clear how a single square Tower could have been introduced at the West end. But Leland's visit was very short and his description most superficial. It is not improbable that he may have mistaken one of the corner Western Towers, part of which is still left, for a main Western Tower. It is to be regretted that no ancient Ground-plan of the Church has been preserved, nor any old engraving of it, except the wretched one by D. King in the earlier editions of the Monasticon.

This one is given in Tanner: and, as an initial letter, in the New Monast. (Malm.) where the leopards are drawn the wrong way. ¹ "Sir Browne." Aubrey had two correspondents of this name. One, William Browne, B.D., who had been Usher at Gardner's School, Blandford, co. Dorset, in 1638 when Aubrey was there as a boy, used in after life to write to him as "his most loving pupil," subscribing himself "W. Fuscus." The other "Sir Browne," a young Wiltshire-man, of Minty, (probably son of Richard Browne, Vicar there, who died 1682), was one of Aubrey's occasional assistants in supplying parochial information. "Sir," in Latin Dominus, was formerly used instead of "Reverend." Dominus is still a title used in Colleges for all Bachelor of Arts.

² Malmesbury Abbey Church was first dedicated to Our Saviour, St. Peter and St. Paul. In the grant of King Edgar, the Blessed Virgin and St. Aldhelm are noticed as the Patron Saints. "Sir Browne" seems to describe a different Seal from the one (p. 256. n. 3) engraved by Bayly, and in Moffatt p. 97. The two small shields were probably the same in both: viz. 1. FRANCE and ENGLAND; for King Edw. III. 2. A Griffin; for the KINGDOM OF WESSEX. Bayly and Moffatt both engrave a lion rampant: but it is a griffin on the original seal.

of Malmesbury says it was buried under the High Altar, which would be about the centre of the present garden of the Abbey House. Both the effigy and the Tomb are of a style some hundreds of years after the time of Athelstan. Browne Willis doubted whether even the figure could be the same that had belonged to the original tomb when at the East end of the Church. Mr. Britton was of opinion that they have no reference whatever to Athelstan. But it is not impossible that they may have been erected at some later period, in honourable memory of the Benefactor of Malmesbury. Moffatt (p. 70) says that the Tomb was once opened, and that it seemed to have been only a cenotaph. The falconer's glove is broken off, but a portion of the tassell remains.

Antony Wood who visited the Church in 1678, says in one of his MS. letters; "Athelstan's monument had the head knocked off in the Civil Wars, and the inhabitants put on a new one with a bushy beard, but whether like the former I cannot tell. This monument I suppose formerly stood in the Choir, but removed to this place at the Dissolution." After quoting Leland's meagre account of Malmesbury, he adds "Thus far Leland concerning Malmsburi, but, which is a wonder to me, not one word of a monument in the Abbey Church and particularly that of Athelstan. There is not one coat of Arms in the windows."

² A Chapel dedicated to St. Michael (see Leland Coll. 1. Pt. 2, pp. 30, 31) was built by Aldhelm; and in it he was buried; but, for the fact that it stood upon this site, Aubrey produces no authority. The "Abbey House" is traditionally said to have been built by one of the Stumpe family. The Arms, of Stumpe impaling Baynton, still over the door facing the garden, point to Sir James Stumpe (whose first wife was Bridget Baynton of Bromham) as the person who probably pulled the Porch to this house, built by Stumpe, are two Scutcheons in stone. STUMPE and [BAYNTON, Nos. 384 and 385]. Where the House now stands was St. Michael's Chapel. The wealthy clothier Stumpe came from North Nibley in Gloucestershire.¹ He bought a vast deal of the Abbey Lands hereabout. When King Henry the 8th hunted in Bradon Forrest, he gave him a noble Entertainment; the King admiring at it, he told his Majestie his servants should only want their suppers for it. His eldest sonne, to whom he left a great possession of Malmesbury Abbey Lands was Sir James Stumpe, Sheriff (1551 and 1559). He left one daughter, married to Sir Henry Knevet, who had Charlton, Brinkworth, &c. One of Sir Henry Knevet's daughters married Thomas Howard, Earl of Suffolk, who gave these lands to his second son Thomas, Earl of Berks.

John Leland says in his Itinerary, that when he was here, the Monks' dortures (dormitories) &c. were filled with weaver's Loomes, and that there were made every year a 3000 Cloathes.

down the Monastery, and made out of it a residence for himself. The lower parts of this house are much older than the upper. They consist of a range of cellars formed out of larger apartments, of ecclesiastical style. The present floor, partly made of old encaustic tiles, is on a level with the capitals of a handsome arcade. The arrangement of that arcade is not one usually found in Chapels, but has more the appearance of having belonged to a refectory. The original floor of this refectory lies 10 or 12 feet below the present floor of the cellars. The Abbey when entire covered the ground on the North and East sides of the Abbey Church, including the space now occupied by a brewery. In the narrow street leading from Malmesbury Cross to the Abbey House, there was to be seen a few years ago the arch of an entrance gateway: part of the wall of which is still against a house. One of the rooms in the Abbey House, lined with oak wainscot, is commonly called Henry 8th's Banqueting Room. If it was so, this room must of course have been here in the clothier's time: but it is probably later, as over the chimney piece are the Arms of Ivy, a family who were living here about A.D. 1670. (See p. 247.) The Arms of Baynton in No. 385 vary from the usual bearing of that family which was Sable a bend lozengy Argent.

Mr. Weekes assures me that there are, in and about Malmesbury, besides Whitchurch whose steeple is now, I thinke, pulled downe, seven chapels, in Malmesbury, Westport, Burton Hill.

Mr. Sayer of Hartwell, Bucks, says there was a Chapell at Burnevale, and that the old woemen talk of a Lady Abbesse there. Sed quære Mr. Weekes de hoc. Resp. That here are the ruines of a small Religious House for woemen, dedicated to Our Ladie; but believes no Lady Abbesse.²

¹ Leland's description of St. Paul's in 1544 is as follows. "The body of the olde Paroch Chirch, standing in the West" (read South) "End of the Chirch Yarde, is clene taken down. The Est ende is convertid in aulam civicam. The fair square Tour in the West ende is kept for a dwelling house." [Itin. II. 53.] The Church used to be called "St. Paul's in Bynport."

All that remained of St. Paul's Church in 1852 was taken down in that year except the tower and spire which are still standing: the materials were sold by the Churchwardens, and the site was appropriated to burial. The building had been for a long time desecrated as a receptacle for lumber. It did not stand in an even line with the tower, and might have been taken for an aisle of the original church, but for Leland's statement that it had been the East end. It had an East window. Some portions of St. Paul's were of very early character, and a few Norman fragments, (to be seen, 1853, in a neighbouring garden) were said to have been certainly brought from this church. There were also two or three windows with good Perpendicular tracery.

² For the number Seven, Tradition has a fondness that is not always so well grounded as it appears to have been in the present case. "Mr. Weekes" reported traces of seven, besides Whitchurch. As he omitted to give the names, it is not clear whether he reckoned Westport as one of the seven. The following list is therefore only conjectural. Letters of the alphabet have been added to Aubrey's rough plan [Pl. xxv.] to indicate the relative positions of these buildings.

1. BURNEVALE (i.e. Bourn-vale) CHAPEL. See Plate xxvi: and for its site, O, upon the Plan in Pl. xxv. This chapel was for many years used as a Poor-House and is now destroyed. 2. BURTON HILL CHAPEL: (See Pl. xxvi: and for its site, Pl. xxv. R.) This was taken down some years ago.

3. ST. JOHN'S (marked P in Pl. xxv.), near the bridge: part of a Hospital of St. John of Jerusalem: front still standing.

4. ST. MICHAEL'S. Certainly mentioned in Deeds: but whether it stood as Aubrey says above, on the site of the Abbey house, or was attached to the Abbey Church, is doubtful.

5. WHITCHURCH. (N. in Pl. xxv.) about one mile from Malmesbury on the way to Charlton. See infra p. 267, n. 2.

6. ST. HELEN'S. (S. in Pl. xxv.) At the corner of formerly Milk Street. [Moffatt, p. 102.]

7. WESTPORT. The Church was anciently called St. Mary's Chantry. (See next page, note 3.)

8. Moffatt (p. 102) mentions traces of a Chapel West of the Church last mentioned. In a narrow street leading to the Horse Fair, a very ancient doorway, and good Perpendicular window of two lights, are still to be seen in a cottage on the left hand side. Aubrey appears to have thought that a Chapel stood at the site marked T. in Pl. xxv.

Besides the above, the Valor Ecclesiasticus names, as in the Abbey Church, a Chapel of St. John Baptist, the Chapel of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and the shrine of St. Aldhelm.

² In his Plan (Plate xxv.) Aubrey marks a second Cross (K.) at Malmesbury, besides the large Market Cross (L.) now there. It stood in the Church-yard, either of St. Paul's, or of the Abbey Church.

⁴ i.e. the Monastery; see p. 259, note 2. The Abbey Church, (partly left, and now used as the Parish Church) suffered great havoc immediately after the Dissolution. The central steeple, “with mighty high pyramis,” had fallen down within memory, before Leland's visit, (1544) but from what cause, he does not say. Cranmer's Licence to convert the Abbey Church into a Parish Church is dated 20th August 1541. It is printed in Wilts Archæol. Mag. I. 249.

Before the late Warres here was a prettie Church, where there were very good windows and a fair steeple higher than the other, which much adorned the Towne of Malmesbury; in it were five tuneable bells, which Sir W^m. Waller melted into Ordnance, or rather sold; and the church was pulled down, that the enemy might not shelter themselves against the garrison of Malmesbury.

The church was dedicated to St. Mary. Here were three aisles, which took up the whole area. It is reported to have been more ancient than the Abbey. In the windowes, which were very good, were inscriptions which declared so much.³

At Westport, in the rode that goes towards Sherston, is an ancient building, ¹ Malmesbury was occupied as a military post seven times between the summer of 1642 and May 1644. 1. By Sir Edward Baynton for the Parliament. 2. By the Royalists under Lord Digby, or Col. Lunsford, February 1643, just after the taking of Cirencester. 3. Re-captured by Sir William Waller on 22nd March in the same year. 4. Abandoned by Sir Edward Hungerford almost immediately afterwards: and again occupied by Royalists from Cirencester. 5. Re-possessed by the Parliament Forces 20th April, the garrison being wanted by the King at Reading. 6. Retaken by the Royalists after the victory of Roundway, July 1643. 7. Recovered by Massey for the Parliament 25th May 1644. From this period it remained in the hands of the Parliament, being strengthened by an outpost of Cavalry at Charlton Park. Malmesbury was a position of great importance, as it commanded the road between Oxford and Bristol.

² Westport is now part of the town: being, as Aubrey elsewhere says, "the Parish without the West Gate: which Gate, now demolished, stood on the neck of land that joins Malmesbury to Westport."

The grange of Thornhill in this parish belonged to Malmesbury Abbey: and was granted in 1 Edw. VI. to Sir William Herbert, the first Earl of Pembroke.

³ In his "Life of T. Hobbes" written 1680, Aubrey says "Now is here rebuilt a church like a stable." To the body built between 1643 and 1680, an aisle was added a few years ago.

In the New Monasticon, vol. IV. p. 402, under the head of St. Mary's Priory, Kington St. Michael, is a notice of a payment of 12 pence a year to that House, out of the rents belonging to St. Mary's Chantry, Westport.

which looks like an hermitage.¹ Q. de hoc. There are severall about Westport and Malmesbury.

This place is for nothing so famous as for the birth of my honoured and learned friend and country-man Mr. THOMAS HOBBS.²

² At this point in his MS., Aubrey has some biographical memoranda of his friend, "the Philosopher of Malmesbury:" but as he afterwards used them in his "Life of Hobbes," (printed in "Letters from the Bodleian" vol. II. p. 593) it will be sufficient to note here only such as more particularly relate to the town. In the Memoir alluded to, Aubrey is at great pains to describe minutely the site of the humble cottage in which Hobbes was born: and in the present MS. has left a sketch of it and a plan of the town, on purpose to identify the place without mistake. [See Pl. xxv. Letter A., and Pl. xxvii. No. 388.] The sketch has survived the cottage, which was taken down some years ago. It stood at the corner of the Horse-Fair.

The Philosopher was second son of Mr. Thomas Hobbes, Vicar of Westport. "The Father," says Aubrey, "was one of the ignorant Sir Johns" (priests) "of Q. Elizabeth's time; could only read the prayers of the Church and the Homilies, and valued not learning, not knowing the sweetness of it. He was a cholerick man; and a Parson (who, I think, succeeded him at Westport) provoked him a-purpose at the Church door. So Vicar Hobbes stroke him, and was forced to fly for it, and, in obscurity beyond London, died." This family was established at Malmesbury. "The Vicar's elder Brother Francis had been Alderman" (the chief magistrate in those days). "He was a wealthy glover: a great trade there, and had been greater." Having no child, he maintained his nephew ("the Philosopher") at Oxford, and at his death gave him a pasture called the Gaston ground lying near to the Horse-Fair, worth £16 or £18 per annum.

At four years old Hobbes went to school in Westport Church: then to Mr. Evans, Minister of the town; and afterwards to Mr. Robert Latimer "a good Grecian, who being a Bachelor (of Arts) not above 19, taught him and two or three more ingeniose laddes after supper till 9: at his own house in Westport, where the broad place is, next door north from the Smyth's shop, opposite to the Three Cuppes, as I take it," (see above, p. 102), "by whom he so well profited that at 14 years old he went a good scholar to Magdalene Hall in Oxford, and before he went did translate Euripidis Medea out of Greek into Latin iambiques. I have heard his brother say that when he was a boy he was playsome enough; but withall he had a contemplative melancholinesse. He would gett into a corner and gett his lesson presently. When young he loved musique and practised on the lute. In his old age too he used to sing prick-song every night when all were gone and sure nobody would hear him, for his health, which he did believe would make him live 2 or 3 yeares longer. He was a tall man, rather more than six foot, hazel quick eie, which continued to his last. Higher than I am by half a head. He hath no countryman living now, 1677, hath known him so long as myself: nor of his friends doth know so much."

For the rest of Hobbes's Life the reader is referred to the work above-mentioned. He did not

In John Aubrey's MS. of the present volume there is an original letter from his brother William Aubrey lying loose, containing as much information about Hobbes's kindred as he could obtain, from such of them as were surviving in 1680.

About 1660 Mr. William Hobbes, first or second cousin to the Philosopher, was a great clothier at Malmesbury, and had an estate at Cleverton. There is still in Malmesbury Abbey Church, a brass to Edmund Hobbes, a Burgess 1606: and the name often occurs in the Parish Registers, between 1590 and 1610. There is a portrait of the Philosopher at Hardwick: an engraving in the Antiquarian Repertory vol. I. 388: and a small one in the Frontispiece of his translation of Homer 12mo. 1677. He is said to have been pleased with an epitaph suggested by anticipation for his grave, “This is the Philosopher's stone.” His works were a few years ago re-published by the late Sir William Molesworth.

¹ A MS. Chronicle seen by Leland in Malmesbury Abbey said that the ancient name of Burton had been Ilan-burgh. The Manor belonged to the Abbey: and was charged with £5 per annum payable in 1530 to John Lord Hussey. In 1534 this had become, by purchase, payable to Thomas Awdelett. Edward Carey had a grant of lands here from the Crown, in 1576. Adam Archarde was a landowner in 1587. In 1606, the Tithes of Corston, Rodbourn, and Tythings of Burton and Thornhill, parcel of the Rectory of St. Paul's, were granted by Patent of King James I. to Lawrence Baskerville, William Blake, and Roger Rogers. In 1825 they were purchased by Mr. R. H. Gaby of Chippenham, and were by him re-sold in lots. Burton Hill House, then belonging to J. Cockerell Esq. was destroyed by fire on Saturday 14th March 1846. The estate attached to it was afterwards sold to the present owner Charles William Miles Esq. Sheriff of Wilts 1856. At Cowbridge, a new house was built about 1855 by S. B. Brooke Esq. Burton Hill Chapel (Pl. xxvi.) stood near the corner of the road leading to Cowbridge, behind the late Mr. Salter's House. See also Plan of Malmesbury, Pl. xxv. Letter R.

² Cowfold (corrupted to Cufold, then to Cold, now to Cole-) Park, in the Parish of St. Paul's Malmesbury, was part of the large grant made under the name of the “Manor of Brokenborough” to that Abbey by King Edwy, (see above, p. 210). This was the Abbot's Home-farm or Grange. After the Dissolution it was used for the breeding-stud of King Henry VIII. In 1609 King James who granted him a Lease, or the Fee, of Coleparke. He was a Justice of Peace and dyed about 1637.

CORSTON.

In the Church nothing to be found;¹ the modern zeal has been reforming here-about. Surely this tract of land, Gloucestershire and Somerset, encline people to zeal. Heretofore nothing but Religious Houses, now nothing but Quakers and Fanatiques. It is a sour woodsere² country, and inclines people to contemplation. So, that, and the Bible, and ease, for it is now all upon dairy-grassing and clotheing, sett their witts a-running and reforming.

One Mr. Bailly³ gave £3 towards the repayre of the Chancell, where he lies buried,

James I. paid to Sir Robert Brett, Kt. £182 16s. 8d. to build a dry wall round it for the same purpose. The Park itself contained 300 acres. At "Cowfold grange," and Rodbourne, lands were granted by the Crown to Sir Thomas Gresham in 1578. Sir George Marshall was residing at Colepark in 1625. In March 17th of that year a Royal Warrant was issued to pay him £100, "to build a new Lodge at Malmesbury Race." He was buried in Malmesbury Abbey Church. In 1629 Marmaduke Marshall lived here. His daughters, Frances and Ciceley were buried, and Margaret was baptized, at Malmesbury. Hugh Awdley (Sheriff of Wilts 1654) was afterwards owner. Then by marriage, the Harvey family of Thurleigh and Ickwell Bury, co. Bedford. It is now the property of Audley, eldest son of Peter Harvey Lovell Esq. The house is moated and has lately been enlarged. Over the hall fire-place in the older part, is a shield of Arms, Harvey impaling Selfe. On a hill in the grounds is an ancient mound. The Sheriff used to hold his Court at "Cofaude" twice a year in the reign of Hen. III. [Hundred Rolls.]

² The Manor of "Whitechurch, with Milbourne Tything" belonged to Malmesbury Abbey, and together with "Maltraver's Fee, in Fuling's" and "Wyneyard's Mill" was held under lease in 1534 by William Stumpe. On the page of his MS. on which Aubrey drew the rough plan of Malmesbury (Pl. xxv.) he has marked the Chapel formerly here as having a spire, and upon the margin he adds; "Whitchurch, formerly a Chapelle with a pretty steeple, is turned into a dwelling house, and did belong to Capt. William Ivy, who pulled downe the steeple to build with, about 1675." The Chapel was probably dedicated to St. James, offerings at his Image being named in the Valor Ecclesiasticus. It is called in a Malmesbury Charter "Album Monasterium." Of the origin of the name of White-church, Bede says "there was a time when there was not a stone Church in all the land, but the custom was to build them all of wood; and therefore when a Church was built of stone, it was such a rarity and unusual thing among the Britons that they called the place 'Candida Casa' or White-Church." [Hist. III. c. 4.] In 37 Hen. VIII. the Manor of Whitchurch cum Milborne was granted by the Crown to Richard Moody. It was (as just mentioned) Captain Ivy's in 1675. The estate, about 200 acres, now belongs to Dr. Kinnear.

Malmesbury Abbey also had at one time some estate here: and in A.D. 1248 it had the Right of Patronage. [See New Monast. Malmes: Chart. No. xiii]. In 36 Hen. ² The figure of the knight “cap-à-pee,” and the rest of the stained glass here described, (which, from a few pieces now left, appears to have been very good,) were probably in the windows of a small Chantry at the East end of the North aisle used by the Hungerford Family. The Knight was Sir Thomas Hungerford of Down Ampney who died October 1494. His wife was Christian daughter of John Halle, of the Halle, Salisbury. A few columbine flowers (the charge on the shield of her family) are still scattered over the windows: and there are also well executed heads, of the Blessed Virgin Mary with the letters M. Of one of the inscriptions, only the words “Militis et Dame” remain.

This is not taken notice of by any body.

¹ In Edmondson's pedigree of Earl Powlett, there is a Nicholas, second son of Sir Hugh Poulett of Hinton St. George, co. Somerset, and brother of Sir Amias the jailor of Mary Queen of Scots: but no wife's name is given. The style of dress on the Minty brass corresponding with the period (Sir Amias having died 1588), his brother Nicholas may have been the person here buried. Mary the wife of Nicholas Powlett of Minty was daughter of Thomas Hungerford of The Lea near Malmesbury and Edith Strange his wife: great grandson of Sir Thomas and Christian Hungerford above-mentioned. The children of Nicholas Powlett named on the brass are Ames an only son (who would be nephew to Sir Amias) Elizabeth, Mary (who married Henry Long of Ashley near Box in Wilts) and Edith. See Mr. E. Kite's Wilts. Brasses, p. 84.

² The letter P is now the only one that is not visible. The inscription is "WILLIAM - ENN DYED THE 12 OF MARCH IN THE YEAR OF OUR LORD 1591." This was Sir William's great grandfather soon after whose death in 1591 the estate was sold to the Pleydells. [Burke's Land. Gent. II., p. 1021.]

³ Sir William was son of Captain Giles Penn, and was born at Bristol 1621: he was knighted 1665: died 1670, and was buried in Redcliff Church. [See Mon. Insc. there].

NEWNTON.

This village anciently belonged to the Abbey of Malmesbury, and was given to them by *V. Legier Book.*³

It affords a lovely prospect to the South, S.W. and S.E.⁴ On the South it is terminated by the blew hills of Hackpen and Cherhill, and others of that range; in the fore-ground Malmesbury town, the Ruins of the Abbey, Charlton House the seat of the Earle of Berkshire, and, till these late unhappy warres, with the woods of Charlton Parke and the parke of Hyams.⁵ At the upper end of this

village was the house of Sir Giles Estcourt Kt. and Baronet, Lord of this Mannor, flanked with a delicate grove of oakes, which he cut down and sold for £700. [Arms of SIR G. ESTCOURT Pl. xxviii. No. 402]. This village, long time ago, stood a little higher in the field, where they still plough up foundations of houses: the tradition is that it was burned, and then built here, whence it was called Newnton, quasi New-town.¹ At the upper end of this town, at the old manor house, where the old pigeon-house is, is a fine fountain of freestone, from which the water was brought in pipes of lead to Malmesbury Abbey: they oftentimes digged for the pipes, but now I think few are left: some of these pipes have been digged up within these twenty years.

The Church here was anciently a Chappell of Ease to Malmesbury, from which it is distant above two miles: and buried here. There is the Inscription of the first Rector here, which see: Hic jacet, &c.²

King Athelstan having obtained a victory over the Danes by the assistance of the inhabitants of this place, riding to recreate himself, found a woman bayting of her Cowe upon the way called the Fosse, which runs through this parish and is a famous Roman way that goes from Cornwall to Scotland.¹ This woman sate on a stoole, with the Cowe fastened by a rope to the legge of the stoole; the manner of it occasioned the king to aske why she did so? she answered the King, that they had no Common belonging to the Town. The Queen being then in his company, by their consents it was granted that the Town should have so much ground in Common next adjoining to this way as the woman would ride round upon a bare-ridged horse. She undertakes it; and for ascertayning the ground the King appointed Sir Walter, a Knight that wayted on him, to follow the woman, or goe with her; which being donne and made known to the monkes at Malmesbury, they, to show their liberality upon the extent of the King's Charity, gave a piece of ground, parcell of their inheritance, and adjoining to the Churchyard, to build a House upon for the Hayward to live in, to look after the beasts that fed upon this Common. And for to perpetuate the memory of it, appointed the following Prayers to be said upon every Trinity Sunday in that howse with the Ceremonies ensueing. And because a monke of that time, out of his devotion gave a Bell to be rung here at this howse before Prayers began, his name was inserted in the Petitions for that gift.

² It is called a Rectory in 1248 (New Monasticon). There is no inscription actually naming the first Rector, but a brass with the effigy of a Priest, John Erton, "quondam Rectoris," formerly Rector, who died 1503. The Sarum Registers give many older names: the first recorded being John de Bray who died 1309. Another brass, to Nicholas White, mentions that "he first obtained from Malmesbury Monastery, the right of burying in the Church and Cemetery." It is without date, and does not say that he was Rector at all. [See Mr. Kite's Wilts. Brasses, p. 41]. The Church is dedicated to "Holy Trinity." There is a view of it, taken before the body was rebuilt in 1842, in Relton's Churches. In Malmesbury Abbey Register is a Composition between the Abbot, and a brother Abbot of Kingswood, about the course of a stream at Newnton. A house, now the Bell Inn, standing where the Foss road crosses the Turnpike road, is traditionally said either to have been a chapel, or to have had a Bell placed here to call the more distant parishioners to Church. Quære: May it not have been the House with the Bell, mentioned in "The Custome"? See next page.

The Ceremonies.

The Parishioners being come to the door of the Hayward's house, the door was struck thrice, in honour of the Holy Trinity: then they ent'red. The Bell was rung; after which silence being ordered, they read the Prayers aforesaid. Then was a Ghirland of Flowers, made upon a hoop, brought forth by a mayd of the Town upon her neck; and a young man, a Bachelor, of another parish, first saluted her three times,^a in honour of the Trinity, in respect of God the Father. Then she puts the ghirland upon his neck, and kisses him three times, in honour of the Trinity, particularly God the Sonne; then he puts the ghirland on her neck again, and kisses her three times, in respect of the Holy Trinity, and particularly the Holy Ghost. Then he takes the Ghirland from her neck, and, by the Custome, must give her a penny at least, which, as fancy leads, is now exceeded, as 2s. 6d., or &c.

The method of giving this ghirland is from house to house annually, till it comes round.

In the Evening every Commoner sends his supper up to this house, which is called the Eale-House; ^c and having before layed in there, equally, a stock of Malt which was brewed in the house, they sup together, and what was left was given to the poor.

In the late wars this house was burnt down by the Soldiers, and the custom of supping, together with brewing that quantity of drinke, had ceased in 1670;

^b Mem. About 1660, one was killed striving to take away the ghirland.

^c Of the Eale-hus see Somner's Glossary at the end of the English Historians, printed at London, 1652.

¹ Not strictly so. There was a Roman road all the way, but "The Fosse" is considered to have been the name of the road between Exeter and Lincoln.

The rest of the Ceremonies are yet continued, 1682, in the Toft¹ and on the old house-door which yet remains, which they then carry thither; and a small quantity of drinke, of six or eight gallons, is yet drank after the ghirland is given.

The Forme of Prayer.

"Peace, good men, Peace, this is the House of Charitie, and House of peace. CHRIST JESUS be with us this day and evermore, Amen.

"You shall pray for the good prosperitie of our Sovereigne Lord King Henry VIII. and the Royal Issue (of late dayes King Charles II., Queen Katharine, Duke of York, and the rest of the Royal Progenie), with all the Nobilitie of this Land; that Almighty God would give them such grace, wisdom, and discretion, that they may do all things to the glory of God, the King's honour, and the good of the Kingdome."^a

⁴ Meaning Dominus, Sir, anciently used instead of "Reverend."

Three fourths of the lands here, together with the Rectorial Tithes and the right of nomination to the Vicarage, belonged for 600 years to Malmesbury Abbey, by gift of King Athelstan in A.D. 938. At the Dissolution, the Abbot's estate was sold to Sir John Bridges (created 1554 Baron Chandos of Sudeley). It is supposed to have belonged next to the Danvers family of Dauntsey, as they were the succeeding Patrons. Afterwards it was the property of the Estcourts of Pinkeney, near Sherston. Thomas Estcourt Esq. who died in 1704 bequeathed the Manor and Advowson to his youngest sister, the wife of Richard Creswell Esq. In 1713 they were sold to Sir Edward Gould, Kt., of Highgate, co. Middlesex, and continued in his family till 1798, when the estate was broken up, and disposed of in parcels by Colonel Edward Thoroton Gould of Mansfield Woodhouse co. Nottingham. In 1829 one of these, called Gorsey Leaze, the Lordship of the Manor, and the Patronage, were purchased by the late Joseph Neeld Esq. of Grittleton.

The remaining one fourth of the Parish is believed to have belonged in the 17th century to the Family of Jacob (see Hilmerton p. 169, n. 1). John Jacob, Sheriff in 1681, was of Norton: and his daughter Miss Anne Jacob by will in 1709 founded a small charity here for a school. This family probably built the principal House, which, with its lands, is understood to have passed through the Ayliffes of Grittenham to the late Lord Holland, owner also of the contiguous parish of Foxley.

FOXLEY (in the old Hundred of Sterkeley) belonged in the reign of Will. I., with the adjoining Manor of Easton (see above p. 85) to Roger de Berkeley. In Hen. III. Simon de Eldersfield, co. Worcester, held it, under the Abbess of St. Edward of Shaftesbury. [T. de N.] In 3 Edw. III. (1274) William Delamere, under the same. The last of this family who presented to the Rectory, in 1457, was William Delamere of Hardwick in Eldersfield. The next owners were the Moodys of Garsdon who were followed, about 1627, by the Ayliffes of Grittenham in Brinkworth. George Ayliffe Esq. married Judith Strangways of Melbury co. Dorset; and after the death (as it is believed) of their daughter Judith Ayliffe, who gave the Communion Plate to the Church and died in 1727, Foxley passed to the family of Lord Holland.

The Church is ancient and has some good Early English columns. On the South is a "Low-side" window. In a side-chapel on the North is a fine monument to George Ayliffe (abovementioned) who died 1712, and his wife Judith Strangways, 1716; with a shield of their arms impaled. Also a tablet to Richard Carter who died May 11th 1843, aged 92, and Eleanor Mary his wife 26th December 1844 aged 88, after an union of 70 years. Another tablet mentions that "This chancel was Pav'd by John Stumpe Rector here" (1679-1726) "June 29, 1708. Never done before." The initials of this Rector, I. S. 1682, are on a small chalice: and a small paten bears the name of "JEFEREY PENEL of FOXLES PARYSH, 1606."

² The Manor belonged to the Fitz Payne family, temp. Hen. II., then to the Bohuns, Earls of Privilege, that nobody can be arrested in this Mannor without his warrant. Q: if all Bradon Forrest did belong to the Duke of Lancaster: a coppice there is called Lancaster Wood.¹

In this Parish, about half a mile northwards, is the remains of a little Cittadel, with a Keepe Hill, both moated round. In the ground near this place, Farmer Earle ploughed up a sword. This Cittadell is called by the name of Norwood Castle, a place of defence, no question, for the Duke of Lancaster. Mem. In a close adjoining to the Church-yard are yet to be seen, the ruins of an old seat of the Duke of Lancaster's, and a Chapell; it is now called Court and Chappell Close.

Near to this village is Okesey Parke, the seate of Sir Edward Poole; it is not above one mile about, but admirably well wooded: the best oakes in the County. There are two Witch-hazel trees of that vast bigness I never heard of the Hereford, who are said to have had a castellated house here. By the marriage of a coheiress of Bohun it passed to the Duchy of Lancaster. (In the list of the Duchy estates it is sometimes misprinted Loxley Park). In 1591 the holders of the Manor under the Duchy were Unninge, Baker, and Allis. Sir Henry Poole was a Freeholder in the parish. Others were Keddelbie, Strange and Michelborne, &c. After the Manor had been obtained, in Aubrey's time, by the Pooles, it was bought, c. 1710 by Sir Francis Westley: was left by his will to his daughter Mrs. Adamson, sold to the first Earl of Malmesbury, re-sold to Francis Webb Esq., and since divided. In the Wilts. Archæol. Mag., Vol. VI., p. 198, there is a Survey of it, A.D. 1591.

The Priory of Monkton Farley had by gift of Humphrey de Bohun c. 1221, the patronage of the Rectory of "Wokesie," with an annual payment to him of 40 shillings as tithe of unbroken colts, ("pullorum indomitorum.") The Manor was not given to the Priory, being widow's jointure.

¹ Braden Forest belonged to the Crown, under which certain portions were appropriated. In A.D. 1300 Henry de Laci Earl of Lincoln (and jure uxoris Earl of Salisbury), was an owner within the precinets. [See Wilts. Mag., IV., 201]. He died A.D. 1312: his daughter and heir married Thomas Plantagenet Earl of Lancaster whose nephew was created Duke of Lancaster 1351. Hence "Lancaster" or the "Duchy" wood, the "Duchy" Ragg, &c. In Hen. IV. the estate of the Duke of Lancaster merged in the Crown. In 1696, seven hundred and forty one acres in Braden Forest, including Hatton's Lodge, &c., were leased by the Crown to the Jacobson family, as parcels of the Duchy of Lancaster, under the seals of the Crown and the Duchy (Orig. doc. penes Edit.) In the Pleadings of the Duchy of Lancaster, III., 139, mention is made of Okesey Manor, and Highley. In the Archæologia, Vol. XXXVII., p. 304, is a Paper by J. Y. Akerman Esq., on the Ancient Limits of the Forest of Braden, with a Map, and copies of some Perambulations. See also a Survey A.D. 1591, in Wilts. Archæol. Mag., Vol. VI., p. 200.

For some Church Notes of Oaksey see Gent. Mag., 1806, Pt. I., 212.

like, they are not much less than most of the best oakes in the Parke.

In the Church have been also good windowes, but now extremely defaced. There remayn some pieces of these two coats, SWYNNOW? (See Pl. xxvii. No. 390. "Minty,") and BAYNTON [No. 403].

In the Chancell is an ancient nich, but no figure there, nor any tradition whose monument it was. In a North window is only "Orate pro aīa militis benefactoris."

Sir Nevill Pool, father to Sir Edward, lies buried in this Church: no monument, only a little coate which is POOLE, impaling POOLE of Sapperton. (This would be an impalement of the two coats quartered in the dexter of No. 406, Pl. xxviii.) Insert the Pedigree of Poole.¹

On the great bell here is this inscription: viz., "IESUS NAZARENUS REX IUDÆORUM MISERERE NOBIS." (Between each word is a Head crowned, on which Aubrey observes) This is a Hood, which fashion was by King Henry, I thinke, the Fourth. [Pl. xxvii. No. 401.]

Mem. The Canale, that is to be cut for the uniting the Rivers of Isis and Avon, must runne through this parke. The hint was first given by Mr. H. Brigges, Professor of Geometrie, of Oxford, Mathematician. Observing the neerness of the two rivers in the mappe, he took a journey from Oxford to see it, which was not long before he died. Then the Civill Warrs came, and after there was a calme of quietnesse, Mr. F. Mathew revived it, who made a Mappe, and wrote a treatise of it, about eight sheets; he took much paines about it, and left many good papers concerning it, which had all been unknown, had it not been for me: Aug^r. 1682. Jo. Collins, Mathematician, went down purposely to see, and wrote well of it; and then I told him where Mr. Mathew's papers lay, a bundle that would fill an ordinary portmantue. They were proffered to the Royal Society for £5, together with the plate of the Mappes which did cost £8; but they having not so much public spiritednesse in them, St. James Shaen of Whitehall sent the

Sir Neville Poole of Oaksey was M.P. for Cricklade 1614 and 1623: for Malmesbury 1640—41: and Sheriff 1636. He was an officer for the Parliament and defended Marlborough against the Royalists in 1642. [See Waylen's Marlborough, 157.] Sir Edward Poole Kt., of Kemble, was M.P. for Wootton Bassett 1641; for Cricklade 1658—9. He was afterwards of Oaksey. In an old county list 1667 he appears as a "Justice of Peace with £1000 a year." See some notices of this family in Burke's Landed Gentry; "Poole of Mayfield."

POOLE.

This parish belonged to the Dutchie of Lancaster, to the Pooles now.²

In the east window of the Chancell is the coate, [No. 404], Clifford (read Giffard) Earl of Longueville in Normandy and Earl of Buckingham.³

Henry Briggs who "gave the first hint," was a man of genius and invention, and one of the best mathematicians of his day. He was Professor at Gresham College, and first Savilian Professor at Oxford: died 26th January 1630 and was buried in the choir of the chapel of Merton College.

John Collins who was also a very eminent mathematician, lost his life in the cause of this Cut from the Avon to the Isis. He rode from Oxford to Malmesbury in order to view the ground: but drinking too freely of cyder when overheated fell into a consumption, of which he died November 10th, 1683.

Francis Mathew, was of the co. Dorset and had been Captain in King Charles's service. He had the hint from Briggs, and took much pains about it, went into the country, made a map, wrote a treatise, and addressed himself to The Protector and the Parliament. Oliver was exceedingly pleased with the design and had he lived a little longer would have had it perfected: but upon his death it sunk. After the Restoration Aubrey recommended Captain Mathew to William Lord Brouncker (then President of the Royal Society) who introduced him to the King. His Majesty also approved the design, but (says Aubrey) "money was wanting and public spirited contribution. The Captain had no purse (undone by the Warres): and the heads of the Parliament and Council were filled with other things. Thus the poor old gentleman's project came to nothing."

² Pool Keynes, formerly in the Hundred of Cheggelow; about six miles South of Cirencester. The patronage of the Rectory is still in the Duchy of Lancaster. The Manor is not named in the printed list of the Duchy Estates A.D. 1558, but in the Duchy Office there is a Survey of it in 1591, when Henry Poole held seven hundred and seventy six acres paying Crown Rent £21 6s. 3d. The only Freeholder was John Blandford. In 1381 Sir Thomas Hungerford purchased a Rent of ten marks in the village "De la Pole near Kemel" from Thomas Morleye de la Pole. [H. Deeds].

³ The coat happens to be the same as that of Giffard (which, in the MS., Aubrey by a lapsus calami, wrote Clifford): but in this church it is more likely to have been FITZ PAYNE. In

In the Chancel on a freestone is this inscription:—

In the North windowe of this church is the coate of Parre, Marquesse of Northampton. [No. 405.]

In the wall of that side is a freestone monument, very ill donne, of Edward Poole, Esq., with this Inscription:—

K. Fettiplace.²

9 Edw. I. (1281) Robert Fitz Payne died, holding this Manor under the Earls of Salisbury. [Wilts. Fines and T. de N.] In 1327 Sir Robert Fitz Payne conveyed it with the Advowson to John Maltravers Junr. [Index to Wilts. Fines, Lans. MS. 306.] For some account of Fitz Payne see Hutchins's Dorset, II., 403. Coll. Top. et. Gen., III., 399: and Gent. Mag., 1825, Pt. ii. p. 297, where is a seal of the Arms: over three lions a bendlet. John Maltravers Junr., (son of Lord Maltravers one of the assassins of Rich. II.) left two daughters and coheirresses, of whom Joan the eldest married Sir John Keynes (Burke's Ext. Peer. “Maltravers,”) from whom the Parish derives its second name. For a Pedigree of the Keynes family whose property lay chiefly in Dorset and Northamptonshire, see Baker's Northamptonshire, I., p. 355: and Hutchins's Dorset, I., 110.

¹ John Ferrabee was Rector, according to Sarum Registers, fifty nine years. The verses in the Inscription signify that though so feeble in body, as to be carried to the pulpit, his mind had lost none of its energy. In 1623 he nominated Thomas Ferrabee to the Vicarage of Bishop's Cannings, on the death of George Ferrabee the amateur musician, whose entertainment of King James I., with bell-ringing, organ, “pastoralls and bucolics of his own making,” is described by Aubrey, Natural History of Wilts, 1847, p. 109.

² In the Pedigree of Fettiplace of Bessil's Leigh, Oxon, are two marriages of Fettiplace and Poole: an alliance to which Aubrey perhaps intended to refer.

In the church-yard here, on the South side, under an ordinary freestone tombstone, thus:—

“Here lieth the body of John Plott Esquier, Counsellor at Lawe, who died the 16 day of . . . in the year of our Lord 1645.”

Mem. He was one of the Judges of the Welch circuit.

SEAGRE, vulgo SEGAREY.

Lord Seagrave gott the Mannor house long since. It was sometime a Nunnery.

¹ This village forms a Chapelry, and is within the Parish, of St. Paul's Malmesbury. The Manor and Tithes belonged to Malmesbury Abbey: and according to the old records of that Monastery, the lands seem to have been given at three different periods. The first Grant was made to Aldhelm the Founder, by his relative Ina, the 13th King of Wessex, A.D. 701. The second, by Kynewulf the 17th King of Wessex: in whose charter, A.D. 758, the grounds bestowed are described as lying at the meeting of two rivulets, the Meardæn and the Reód-burne; (in Anglo-Saxon, Reód is reed, and burne, stream). The third gift was by Æthelred the 23rd King of Wessex, in A.D. 982. Among the boundaries of Rodburne, (in the Abbey Cartulary, p. 34) is mentioned a place called “The Heathen Burials;” being some very ancient cemetery. The rents arising from part of the lands here belonging to the Monks, went towards the maintenance of their Cook. The rest was the Abbot's, and was included in the rents received from his Grange at Cowfold (Cole-park) adjoining.

Together with many of the other estates of the Monastery lying near Malmesbury, Rodburne Manor was purchased after the Dissolution by Mr. Stumpe. It is named in the will of his son Sir James, in 1563. It has not been found among the possessions of the Hungerfords of Farley Castle who were owners of the neighbouring parishes of Corston and Stanton St. Quintin, and also of Mauduit's Park: but it belonged to Walter Hungerford Esq. of Studley, M.P. for Calne, second surviving son of Sir George Hungerford of Cadenham. Walter married Elizabeth daughter and heiress of J. Dodson, (not Dudley, as printed in Sir R. C. Hoare's Hungerfordiana, p. 23), and by his will in 1754 bequeathed Rodburne to his nephew George (son of Ducie) Hungerford, also of Studley. George Hungerford (buried at Yatesbury, see above p. 46), by his will in 1764 bequeathed to his widow Elizabeth, daughter of John Pollen Esq., one portion of this estate: the rest to his relatives, the families of Luttrell and Duke. The whole was afterwards re-united, and is now the property of Richard Hungerford Pollen Esq.

The Church is dedicated to “Holy Rood.” In one of his MSS. Aubrey mentions “old Mr. Penn of Rodburne, an ingeniose man and a good chymist,” temp. Jas. I., as of the same family as the founder of Pennsylvania, and Admiral Sir William Penn. [See above, “Minty,” p. 270].

Afterwards it came—quære by purchase or match? to

Mr. Stratton there hath all the Deeds.²

² Many ancient owners are named in this Parish. In A.D. 1084, Drogo, or Drew: whose nephew and successor Walter Drew took the name of Clifford in marrying the heiress of Clifford Castle, and was the father of Fair Rosamond (Collect: Cliffordiana). 1259, Reginald de Burnevale (I. p. M.) 1275, Roger de Clifford. Aubrey then supplies the name of Lord Segrave: upon what authority does not appear. The last ancient Baron of that name died in 1321. Thomas Dru, 1369. [A Deed dated at "Segre" with his seal, viz., "Ermine a wolf or dog (no doubt, a lion) statant," and his wife's, "A greyhound statant," is mentioned in Collect. Top. et. Gen., VI., 359]. In 1373, Bohun: and in 1399, Mortimer, Earl of March, probably as chief lord. In 1417, Thomas Bonham, with whom Aubrey's pedigree begins. The latter part of it seems to require correction. The heiress of Thomas Bonham married William Godwyn of Gillingham, Dorset. The heiress of Godwyn married Robert Mompesson of Bathampton Wyly. John Mompesson their son married Isabel daughter and heir of Thomas Drew, of Seagry. (The letters T. D. were still in a spandril of one of the nave windows in 1849.) Their great grandson Edward Mompesson died 1553 s. p. leaving four sisters coheirresses, one of whom married William Wayte, and it was by their daughter Elizabeth Wayte that the Manor came to Sir Richard Norton of Rotherfield. His grandson Sir Richard sold Seagry 1648 and died 1652.

Mem: Moorshull in Kington parish, Chisenbury, Fisherton Anger and Littleton Drew, were the lands of Mompesson.¹

In the North side of this Church is an ancient freestone monument in a nich, but without inscription or escutcheon; nor is any tradition left whose it is.² On the same side, another of a Chevalier in armour, with his shield, but without any charge on it, or inscription.³

In a window of the North side of the Church remains this figure [No. 410] an

Sir Richard Norton's estate (formerly Mompesson's) was broken up among three purchasers. 1. The Stratton family. 2. The Right Hon. Henry Fox. 3. Mr Bayliffe. The Strattons lived at Upper Seagry. They sold their portion to Joseph Houlton Esq., then of Grittleton, whose son Nathaniel was in 1754 the builder of the present Seagry House. His arms are on the Pediment. In 1785 the Houltons sold it to Sir James Tylney Long and it now belongs to his descendant the Earl of Mornington. Mr. Fox's purchase still belongs to Lord Holland's family. Mr. Bayliffe's to his descendant.

Aubrey's statement, that one moiety of the old Mompesson property went by match to the Hungerfords is a mistake. No such match appears. In a letter to Bishop Tanner he desires this error to be corrected. It is however the case that from 1582 to about the middle of the last century the Hungerfords of Farley Castle had a manor and house at "Over Seagry," of which William Adie was tenant in 1609. This devolved, as the writer believes, upon Lord Lexington in right of his wife the heiress of Sir Giles Hungerford of Coulston, by whom it was sold to the Bouverie family and now belongs to the Earl of Radnor.

There was never any endowed Nunnery at Seagry: but the neighbouring Priory of Bradenstoke had property here, called "Segre Cockerel's," afterwards "Segre Earl's," given to them by Humphrey Bohun Earl of Hereford. They had also the Rectory and patronage of the Vicarage. Likewise some land given by Elias Burell. The lands here belonging to Bradenstoke Priory were leased to, and afterwards bought by, the Danvers family of Dauntsey: which, probably in the same way as Christmalford, passed to the Herberts. Seagry vicarage is now in the gift of the Earl of Caernarvon.

In 1651 the Tenants of Seagry manor considered themselves as tenants under the Duchy of Lancaster. [Original Deed.]

¹ Moreshall and Swinley, in Kington St. Michael parish, then belonging to Edmund Leversage and Grace his mother, were held under Seagry manor in 25 Elizabeth. [Hungerford Cartulary.]

² Seagry Church was entirely re-built in 1849. The "monument in the niche," called "The Nun's," is now within the altar rails, North side. Nothing is known of its history.

Esquire kneeling, with a silver collar* round his neck, and an escutcheon, viz., Dexter side broken out: Sinister, (perhaps HORSEY, No. 412).

At the East side of the Chapell is also an ancient tombe without escutcheon or inscription, whereof no tradition is left.¹

SOMERFORD MALTRAVERS, S. Magna, or Broad S.²

In the Legier-Book of the Earle of March, I find William de Bohun Earl of

* A Silver Collar of SS (as this should be) is to be worn by an Esquire: Collar of SS of Gold, by Knights.

² As there are in North Wilts three separate parishes called Somerford, (viz. S. Magna, S. Parva, and S. Keynes) whilst in the earlier Records the name of Somerford only is used, without any thing else to distinguish which is meant, it becomes difficult to trace their respective histories. That of Broad Somerford appears to be as follows.

Under the Barony of Castle Combe (to which Aubrey's extract refers) the principal manor belonged in Hen. III., and down to Hen. IV. to the family of Maltravers. In the latter reign, Alianora the heiress of Sir John Maltravers married John Fitz Alan, Earl of Arundell. At his death 1379, she married secondly Reginald 2nd Lord Cobham of Sterborough, who was accordingly owner, but only for life, jure uxoris. In 1438, Walter Lord Hungerford held it in a similar manner, as second husband of a Countess of Arundell. The Manor and Advowson continued with the Lords Arundell and Maltravers, till purchased by John Yewe of Bradford (on Avon), about 1573. In 1637 they belonged to Robert Jason Esq. raised in 1661 to a Baronetcy which became extinct in 1738. Mrs. Birtell is now Lady of the Manor.

The Patronage of the Rectory formerly lay in the Lords of the Manor, but has for some years belonged to Exeter College, Oxford. In 1676 there was a law-suit about it between Edmund Bruning of Hambleton and Sir R. Jason, which was decided in favour of the latter.

Some part of Somerford was anciently called Somerford Ewyas. It belonged to the Maltravers family, and was held by them, not under the Barony of Castle Combe, but under that of Ewyas, afterwards Tregoz.

A third property here belonged to the Nuns of St. Mary's Priory, Kington St. Michael. This seems to be the portion called in Domesday Book Edward of Salisbury's; afterwards Bohun, Earl of Hereford's, under whom the Nuns held. In 1499 they paid a chief rent to Lord Arundell, and also to John Hussey. Their land was granted in 1541, at the Dissolution, to Sir Richard Long of Draycote. In 1579 it appears to have been transferred to Sir John Thynne. [Jones's Index.] By a Deed in the New Monasticon (Kington St. Michael's) the "Church of Somerford" was given to the Nuns by Richard de Heriet: who appears (Coll. Top. et. Gen. VI. 336) to have married a Maltravers. But the Nuns presented only once, in 1324.

Northampton, had by right of Elizabeth his wife, third daughter and coheir of Egidius de Badlesmere, among other lands in this County, "One Knight's Fee in Somerford Mautravers in Co. Wiltes, which John Mautravers holds, valued at £6 per ann."

In the Church, N. side, E. windowe, is this Escutcheon [Pl. xxviii. No. 416] which is by the name of RUSSELL. In the Limbe (margin) "Orate pro Animabus Elisabeth uxoris ejus." Two figures, with Miscrrrr, &c. on labels issuing from their mouths. Q. their habitts.

In the Chancel. In the Limbe of the window thus: "Orate pro aia Thome Drew, et pro bono statu Agnetis uxoris ejus." Q. the coate of Drew.¹

The Assassination of Harry Long was contrived in the Parlour of the Parsonage here. Mr. Attwood was then Parson. He was drowned coming home.²

The Inquisitions p. M. of 1407 mention Sir John Lovell, Kt. as an owner at Somerford, in right of his wife Matilda de Holand. And in 1541 Andrew Wyndsor, Lord Wyndsor, obtained from the Crown a grant of Lands in Somerford lately belonging to the Monastery of Syon. [Harl. MS. No. 1880.] To which of the three parishes these two notices allude is not clear.

The Hamlet of Sterkeley which formerly gave its name to a small Hundred (now included in that of Malmesbury) lies in this parish.

Near to the Church, and to the house of H. J. Smith Esq. formerly Sir R. Jason's, is a circular mound, on a site commanding the ford of the Avon. Some remains of semicircular windows and a doorway, with traces of destruction by fire, were found here in 1811.

² The particulars of the murder of Mr. Henry Long, (younger brother of Sir Walter Long of Draycote and South Wraxhall), by Sir Henry and Sir Charles Danvers in 1594, were published, so far as the Editor was able to trace them, in the Wilts Archæol. Mag. I. 305. There had been it is supposed, some private quarrel, and Mr. H. Long's assailant shot him with a pistol, openly in the presence of other county-gentlemen at an inn in Corsham.

Richard Atwood was Rector of Broad Somerford from 1578 to 1605; an absentee, it is to be hoped, whilst murder was contrived (if this really was the case) in his parsonage-house. The old Registers of the Parish, which might have alluded to the circumstances of his death, were destroyed in 1717 by a fire at the Parish Clerk's house, where they were at that time kept. Mr. Atwood was perhaps drowned in crossing the ford when the waters were out, for there was no bridge until the present century, and in 1799 when the late Rev. S. G. Demainbray (who died 1854) came to be inducted into his living, he was obliged to make a long circuit to reach it, or he would have shared his predecessor Mr. Atwood's fate.

SOMERFORD MAUDUIT, S. Parva, or S. Molines.

Mauditch Parke in this parish, vulgarly; the true name is Mauduit's.

At Christmalford is a butcher of the name yet. Here hath been, till of late years, a Parke; the house stands very pleasantly on a hill, facing the West: below in the valley are rich meadows belonging to it. The house is now much decayed.¹

This did belong to Priory St. Marie's. Vide the Legier Book, who gave it.²

On the Church-porch, over the door, is this scutcheon in Stone [Pl. xxviii. No. 413] a cross moline.³ The glass all new. The chancell east windowe of five or six lights walled up, and overgrowne with Ivy.

¹ This Parish obtained its name of Mauduit from an old Baronial family, Lords of Warminster, to which, "Mauduit's," now still more strangely miscalled Marridge Park, belonged in A.D. 1300. Agnes wife of the last John Mauduit remarried Sir Thomas Bradeston Kt., who, jure uxoris, held it at his death 1360. But in 1333 Ægidia, or Gile, John Lord Mauduit's heiress, had married Sir John de Molines, to whom she ultimately brought this estate, with others at Farnhill in Font-hill, Nipred, Tisbury, Whitlegh and the Advowson of the chapel there (near Melksham), Lee, Gore, Combe Biset and Box; all in Wilts: besides others in Bucks and Oxon. Many Deeds relating to the heritage of Mauduit are to be found in a Cartulary of the Molines family, belonging to Henry Hobhouse Esq. of Hadspen, co. Somerset. In Rich. II. this, with several of the above-mentioned estates, belonged to Thomas Despenser, Earl of Gloucester: but on his attainder 1397, returned to the Molines family. About A.D. 1440, Eleanor the heiress of Molines married Robert afterwards Lord Hungerford and Molines. Under this family Robert Long was lessee of Mauduit's Park in 1449. By the marriage of Mary, heiress of the Hungerfords, all the above-mentioned estates of the Molines inheritance, including Somerford, passed to Edward, second Baron Hastings, about 1480. But in 1581 Edward Hungerford (afterwards Sir Edward, of Farley, who died 1607) was owner. He had also the Advowson of Little Somerford. In 1657 Antony Hungerford had, besides these, another property in the parish, then leased to Richard Estcourt. The Patronage was purchased about 1686, probably from the extravagant Sir Edward Hungerford, by Sir Stephen Fox, from whom it has descended to the Earls of Ilchester. Mauduit's Park in later times belonged to Mr. Egerton of Newton Toney, who sold it to W. Bendry of Christmalford, by whom it was bequeathed to the family of the present proprietor S. B. Brooke Esq. of Cowbridge House, near Malmesbury. The Arms of the Hungerfords are still upon the house at Mauduit's.

² The estate never belonged to the Priory (St. Mary's, Kington St. Michael): but the Nuns had in this parish at the Dissolution, some Tithes out of Mauduit's: then about 18s. a year. Malmesbury Abbey received xiid. a year from the Rector of Little Somerford, out of certain lands under Angrove, for the Warden of St. Mary's Chapel, in the Abbey Church.

³ A cross Flory: still there.

Q. Mr. Palmer, if any Tombe in the church.¹

Mr. Anth: Ettrick tells me, that in the Belfre windowe is, Or, three pales wavy G., which is the coate, he believes, of MAUDUIT [No. 414].

Mem: In an old booke at the Herald's office, I find the Coate [No. 415] viz. G. a three-peux dancetté d'or, by the name of Sir John Mauduit.²

STANTON ST. QUINTIN.

This Mannor came by match from Quintin to the Lords Dacre.

Mem: Stanton Quintin did belong to the Abbey of Cirencester, as appears by the Legier Booke with Sir William Masters there.³

Mem: I have heard my cosen Parson Power say, that the Farme of Stanton, which his family had for many generations on lease, belonged to that Abbot, and that his grandfather was a great favourite of the Abbot's. In the great mead of Christian Malford is ... acres, anciently known by the name of Power's Meade, belonging to Stanton, and it was for the Abbot's horses when he came.⁴

² Three peux, or piles dancetté, is the proper Mauduit shield. Modern Mauduits use three pales: perhaps from an error in translating the old French word peux.

In the reign of Hen. III., the principal Manor of Stanton belonged to, and was the residence of, Sir Herbert de St. Quintin, holding under the Honour of Gloucester. [See Wilts Fines, Testa

The Mannor howse, which is of very old building, is rarely well situated, and in very good aire; the grounds midling. It hath a delicate prospect south and east towards Hackpen¹ and that range of hills, and north to Cotswold.

The hall is above stairs, all on an ascent outwards, as at Bradenstoke Abbey. In the hall and parlour are two old-fashioned protuberant chimnies, which fashion is still used in France. The upper rooms are floored with oak, which perhaps was the general fashion in the old time, and brought in, no question, by the French. Here is a little building with leads and battlements, which was, I believe an Oratory; by the door is a well carved Holy-water niche and basin in stone. A brave mote was here, part remaining, well stored with fish: and an old-fashioned gate-house.²

de N., and a curious Deed of the St. Quintins dated here Oct. 1303, in Hutch. Dorset., II., 509]. From the St. Quintins, (as indeed Aubrey himself also states) it came to Lord Dacre; not by a match between those two families, but from one to the other by a succession of matches. The course of descent was by the three following heiresses.

1. Lora St. Quintin, a coheiress, about A.D. 1390 married Sir Robert de Grey of Rotherfield, who in right of his mother assumed the title of Lord Marmyon. (Vincent gives the two Christian names as Elizabeth St. Quintin and John de Grey.)

2. Elizabeth Grey, daughter and heiress, married Sir Henry Fitz-Hugh of Ravenswath and died A.D. 1427. (The Parish is sometimes called in Deeds, Stanton Fitz-Hugh). In 1512 on the death of Richard 6th Baron Fitz-Hugh his two sisters and coheiresses divided his estates.

3. Alice Fitz-Hugh married Sir John Fienes, and had this estate.

To their son Thomas Fienes, 8th Lord Dacre, and his successors, it belonged as stated by Aubrey in the text. In 1581 Stanton Manor, late Thomas Lord Dacre's, was granted to William Cecil, Lord Burghley, and his son Robert. About 1670 it belonged to William Halliday, Lord Mayor of London: whose daughter and coheiress married Sir Edward Hungerford of Farley Castle and of Corsham. It passed to Sir Giles Hungerford of Coulston. Sir Giles's daughter and heiress Margaret married Robert Sutton, Lord Lexington, by whom it was sold to Sir Edward Bouverie, ancestor of the present owner Viscount Folkestone.

Of "Power's mead" in Christmalford parish, but belonging as Aubrey says, to Stanton, nothing is now known. Any Abbot, whose horses, after their journey, grazed jure suo in Christmalford, would probably be the Lord Abbot of Glastonbury. (See above, p. 126.)

² In Plate xxi. is a view of the old Manor House in 1856. It had become a Farmhouse and its Demesne had been already converted into a wood (Stanton Park) when Aubrey wrote. The "Oratory" (if it was one), attached to the S.E. corner, was destroyed in 1807. The rest of the house was entirely taken down in 1856; when in removing the parlour inner wall, a stone coffin

Nothing of antiquity now left in the church. In the chancell are two old kind of collegiate seates for priests: and boxes for their song books. It is likely here was some Chauntrey for some of the Lords of the Mannor.⁴ On the west side, containing bones was found imbedded in it, about two feet from the ground. The "hall above stairs" was a large upper room not unlike a chapel, with good timber roof and ecclesiastical windows.

² In the Church-yard at the West end, was buried 26th May 1764, George Hartford a negro sailor who was murdered in the wood called Stanton Park by a comrade named William Jaques of Leigh Delamere. They had sailed together in the "Stag," and had been paid off, each receiving about £28. Having squandered all his own money, the murderer decoyed the poor Black into the wood, and having beaten out his brains with a hedge stake robbed him. He was gibbeted on the brow of Stanton Common, since enclosed.

² These three shields are now inserted in the back of the present Rectory House, the larger part of which was built by the Rev. Samuel Smith, Rector 1780.

⁴ Bishop Beckington's name does not occur in the Wilts Institutions as having been Rector of Stanton. His coat of arms is found on the Church of Yeovilton, and in 1644 it was in the chancel window at Hinton St. George (where also one of the St. Quintin family was buried), and at two or three other places, but all in the co. Somerset. That he was professionally connected with Wiltshire at any period of his life, is not mentioned in the biographies.

¹ The burial-ground at Stanton appears to have been in ancient times larger than at present. Leaden coffins have been found (1852) in the adjoining farm-yard, and traces of foundations and interment within premises belonging to the rectory. The "great deal of painted glass with mitres," which Dr. Power remembered, the tradition about a Bishop, the stone shields with the Arms of a Bishop and an Abbot, and the fine nave arches in the Church, certainly seem to indicate that in some way or other this place was once under high ecclesiastical patronage: but (as already mentioned, p. 286, note 4,) nothing has been met with to show that the principal estate was ever the property of a Religious House. The Sarum Registers contain several appointments of two clergymen here at one and the same time, a Rector, and a Vicar. [See Wilts. Inst. A.D. 1311, 1342 and 1349]. The Lords of the Manor nominated the Rectors: The Rectors appointed the Vicars. The last of the Vicars was in 1393.

On a Tablet in the Chancel to Mary, wife of William Charmbury who was Rector here from 1639 to 1677 is this inscription: "Hic, licet in Occiduo cinere, adspicit EUM, cujus nomen est ORIENS." "Nil tam revocat a peccato quam frequens meditatio mortis. Aug." The first sentence (also on Dr. Donne's monument in St. Paul's) alludes to Zechariah vi. 12, rendered as in the Greek of the Septuagint: "Behold the man whose name is the EAST." "Aug." probably means St. Augustine.

Mr. Charmbury's successor was the Rev. John Byrom M.A. born in 1648, and buried 1717, at West Lavington (where his father Thomas Byrom, who died 1656, had been Vicar, some years). He was a Fellow of King's College, Cambridge, and was presented in 1677, by Sir Giles Hungerford of Coulston, to Stanton Rectory which he held for 40 years. An Assize Sermon from Romans xiii. 1. preached by him at Sarum as Chaplain to the High Sheriff, Thomas Gore Esq. of Alderton, was printed in 1681. One of his letters, written to Aubrey in 1693, on the Custom of Salting at Eton Montem, is published in "Letters from the Bodleian, II., p. 167: and among Bishop Tanner's MSS. at Oxford are also some letters from Mr. Byrom relative to the Bishop's literary and antiquarian pursuits. Upon his death, the Rev. William Twentyman was appointed Rector by Lord Lexington, to whom (as stated on his monument) he had been Chaplain at Madrid.

Etymology of Power. Boer in Low Dutch and, in High Dutch, Bower, which some pronounce Power, means colonus or farmer. So, Power is not potestas.¹

SUTTON BENDER.

Benger is the contracted name for Berenger.

Mem. Barnewell Castle in Northamptonshire was built by Berenger Le Moine ("The Monk.") It is probable that this place (Sutton) was given to the Abbey of Malmesbury by him, at which convent he might be a Monke.

In an old book in the Herald's Office I find the coate of S^r. Ingram BERENGER of Wiltshire [No. 426] scil: Or, a cross Vert, over which a bend Gules.

In the church is only now left the coate of CLARE, in the west windowe of the S. aisle, 3 chevronels. [No. 425.]²

² Barnwell Castle, near Oundle, co. Northampton, was built by Reginald de Moine A.D. 1132, but Berengarius was owner 1270. He sold it to Ramsey Abbey 1278. In 1330 his descendants tried to regain it by law but failed, after which they disappeared from that county.

There are four Suttons in Domesday Book: one of which was held by "Berenger," under Richard Fitz Gilbert the founder of the great Baronial House of Clare, Earls of Gloucester. This may explain how the shield of Clare came to be in after times one of the embellishments of Sutton Benger Church. The family name of Berenger is found anciently both in South and North Wilts: in the former at Ebbesbourne Wake and Alvediston, temp. Hen. III. Its most important member seems to have been Sir Ingelram, or Ingram Berenger, Steward to the Longespées, Knight of the shire in 1315; died 1336. Nicholas his grandson, the last male of the family, left two daughters, one of whom married a Stantor of Horningsham, the other a Bodenham. In North Wilts, "Berenger of Ulfhall," (Wolfhall in Burbage), occurs in a Fine, temp. Hen. III. With the exception of the notice in Domesday Book above-mentioned, they have not been met with, as "of" Sutton: but it is clear that they were connected with it, sufficiently to bequeath their name.

The notices of the parish generally are extremely few. In the earliest records it is called Sutton only. Once, in 1 Rich. II., "Sutton Berengere's" (I. p. M.) The Sarum Registers in 1415 (the first entry in that record in which the second or family name appears), call it "Sutton Bengere's:" at other times "Sutton juxtà Bradenstoke," and once (1497) "Sutton Leonard juxtà Christmald." [Wilts. Inst.] The Church (according to Ecton) is dedicated to All Saints.

Here have been good windows, and is a neat built tower.¹ Q. Inscriptions on bells. One a taylor, who lived where Vicar Ferris now dwells, gave the play-place: he went to the Lord Abbot of Malmesbury, and begged it and got it, for a play-place.

In the Parsonage Parlour here, over the chimney, are two hooded monk's heads cut in stone. Mem. Several hundred yeares since, one of the Abbots of Malmesbury did give to the Church of Sarum the Parsonage of Sutton Benger, and Whitlegh in the parish of Calne, &c., to be exempt from the Bishop's jurisdiction. Mr. Ferris of this place hath the copie of it.² De jure the parsonage here doth belong unto the Tower of Sutton Benger Church.

Besides the Berenger family, Malmesbury Abbey had here ten Hides of land, by gift of Edwy, King of Wessex, A.D. 956, 110 years before the Conquest. [New Monasticon, No ix.] But Sutton is not registered by name as a property of that Abbey in the Norman Survey; the reason being that the ten Hides which the Abbot had here, were included in that Survey, under the head of "Brokenborough." It has been already mentioned (see above, p. 210), that the Manor called Brokenborough, when given by King Edwy to the Abbot, included much now belonging to other parishes. Its whole extent was 100 Hides of land, and in King Edwy's Charter (printed in Kemble's Codex Dipl., Vol. III., p. 446, and also in Archæolog., Vol. XXXVII., p. 267), it is distinctly stated that the Abbot's ten Hides at Sutton formed part of those 100 Hides. "Hi sunt termini x hidarum pertinentium ad Manerium de Brokenberge, quæ sunt de centum Hidis nominatis. Hoc est de Suttone." At page 287 in the Vol. last quoted, is also a list of names of 71 tenants under Malmesbury Abbey at Sutton about the year 1318. Since the Dissolution the principal proprietors have been the Longs of Draycote, maternal ancestors of the present owner the Earl of Mornington.

An Inquisition p. M. (1 Rich. II.) mentions property at "Sutton Berengeres" as belonging to Glastonbury Abbey, but the name no where occurs in the Lists of that House.

Vicar, which the Dean and Chapter of Sarum hath aliened about a hundred yeares.³

Anciently in this parish were vineyards, which are recited among other grants to the Longs by King Henry the Eighth. Gravelly land is the most natural for vines. Near this village, eastwards, is a gravelly field called "Barret's," which is sown every yeare with barley and with no other graine. Never lay fallow in the memory of the oldest man's grandfather there. Some years since, Leon. Atkins sowed a part of it with wheat, for a tryall. It came up wonderfully thick and high: but it proved but fair strawe, and had little or nothing in y^e eare.

period, was entirely restored in 1850. The East window of the South aisle, the tracery of which is Reticulated, has an interesting peculiarity: a stone panel at the bottom of the centre light representing, outside, a model of the whole window in miniature. Inside the Church, the panel forms a canopied niche. The parapet resembles that of St Cuthbert's, Wells. The Tower is at the West end; and from the centre of the roof of it, rises a pretty open-worked spire-let. The late Mr. Britton calls it a pinnacle, not altogether incorrectly, as that word was sometimes applied to a spire, or turret, even to a cupola on the top of a turret; and indeed to any tall perpendicular member on the summit of a building.

MELKSHAM.

THE Forest here, was also called the Forest of Blackmore.²
(Church.)
In the Chancel is an Inscription for Isaac Selfe, a wealthie cloathier

¹ The Lordship of this Hundred anciently belonged to the Crown. King Hen. III. bestowed it upon Amicia, Countess of Devon: and afterwards upon the Prioress and Nuns of Ambresbury. It was again in the hands of the Crown, in Charles I. It was purchased from the Brounckers of Earlstoke by Sir John Danvers of Dauntsey: and is now the property of Walter Long Esq., M.P. of Rood Ashton.

² The Manor of Melksham, and Forest of Blackmore or Melksham, were Royal demesne both before and after the Conquest and were all in the hands of the Crown except three Hides of land held separately by one of the King's Officers. The Wardenship of the Forest was usually held with that of Chippenham. A Perambulation of its boundaries in A.D. 1300 is printed in the Wilts. Archæol. Mag., Vol. IV., p. 206.

One part of the town bears the name of "The City;" for what reason is not known. Some have explained it by saying that the Kings who occasionally came hither for hunting, exalted Melksham to great importance, by establishing there a Court with Royal jurisdiction. The fact simply is, that in those days the King's Justices, to the great inconvenience of suitors, and probably of themselves, followed the King in person; and whether he was at Melksham, or elsewhere, legal business was transacted Coram ipso Rege. Henry II. was here on the Feast of the Conversion of St. Paul in 1183; King John on 8th, 9th and 10th December, 1204—5, James de Potterne being one of the four Justices in attendance; on which occasions Fines were passed.

In the reign of Hen. III. (A.D. 1260) the Abbess of Lacock had a special grant of forty acres out of the Forest near Wodensdich (Wansdyke) which she was allowed to enclose in lieu of cutting wood, &c. [History of Lacock, p. 274.] The King then settled the Manor and Hundred of Melksham upon Amicia, Countess of Devon. This Lady was daughter of Gilbert de Clare Earl of Hertford and Gloucester, and wife of Baldwin de Redvers, seventh Earl of Devon. The grant was for her life, paying to the Crown £48 a year. Shortly afterwards for the purpose of founding in Ambresbury Church Obits for the souls of Prince Arthur of Britany (the King's first cousin, murdered by King John), for that of Eleanor his sister, and for the souls of the King himself and his Queen when they should die, Hen. III. bestowed this Fee-farm Rent of £48 a year, (made up to £50 out of the Exchequer) upon the Prioress and Nuns of Ambresbury, with the reversion to them of the Manor at the Countess of Devon's death. This arrangement was subsequently altered, and the Manor itself was given to the Prioress and Nuns of Ambresbury, they to keep £50 a year out of it for their own use, and to pay all the profits above that sum to the Countess of Devon for her life, and after her death to the Crown. [Hundred Rolls, and original Grant, 13 Edw. I.] King Edw. I. reduced this rent payable to the Crown, to £30 a year: and at the Dissolution it was only £13 13s. 7d.: the net value to the Monastery being then £80 16s. 4d. The Prioress's estate lay at Melksham, Benacre, Whitley, Woodrew, Woolmer, and Seendrow. A Charter, A.D. 1301, granting to the Prioress certain privileges in the Forest, is printed in the New Monasticon, ("Amesbury" p. 338), and another A.D. 1315, relating to a claim of exemption from Tallage, (ditto. p. 334.) King Hen. VIII. in 1514 granted a charter for a Fair on the 17th (now, by change of Style, the 27th) July.

After the Dissolution of Monasteries the chief proprietors seem to have been the Brouncker family, (see "Earlstoke.") The name of Laurence Bronker occurs in a Deed of "St. Mary's Service," in Chippenham Church, as early as A.D. 1378. On the doorway in the garden of "Place House" in Melksham are the Arms of Sir William Brouncker (son of the purchaser of Earlstoke) and his wife, a Mildmay. The Gores of Alderton, whose first known ancestor was of Whitley 1330, also had property here which they sold to the Brounckers in 1544. Other old names of this period were Bertillet, Lovel, and Catour. "Melksham Brouncker" and "Benacre Lovel" are still names for sections of the Parish.

SHAW in this parish was held under the Castle Combe Barony, by William Atmore 1338; Simon Basset 1365; by Cecilia Berkeley 1389; by Sir John Roche of Bromham 1400, then by the Bayntons: and by John Gerrish 1600. Thomas Smith died owner 1723: and from his family it passed by heiress to Robert Neale. The Dean and Canons of Sarum were bound, so early as 1355 (29 Edw. III.) to provide a Priest to say Mass for the deceased Lords of Castle Combe in the Chapel of St. Leonard at Shaw: the neglect of which service is one of the grievances complained of in the Court Rolls of that Barony. [Mr. P. Scrope's History of Castle Combe, 221, 249].

WHITLEGH was an ancient property of the Mauduit, Molines, and Hungerford families. Sir Andrew Baynton's part in 13 Eliz. was bought by Wm. Gerrish. In the same reign William Jordan and H. Brouncker had lands here.

Part of Melksham including the rich land of Iley has been connected with the Whaddon estate apparently since 1253.

ROTTERIDGE. In the Rolls of Parliament is a curious petition from one Nicholas Bourdon, A.D. 1334, relating to "Raderigge" near the Forest. It had been disafforested, and the petitioner describes it as having been "le souverain repair a les bêtes sauvages de la dite Forest pur le pestr' del suboys:" (the principal resort of the game to feed on the under-wood).

Later owners were, in 1418, Thorpe: afterwards, the Selfe family, from whom by marriage it came to Thomas Smith of Shaw, who died 1723. By his grand-daughter it passed to Robert Neale, from whose representatives Rotteridge farm was lately purchased by Mr. Starky of Spy Park.

who dyed y^e day of (1656) in the ninety-second yeare of his age, leaving behind him a very numerous offspring, viz. 83 in number.¹

The North, or Daniel's aisle, belongs to Bineger within this parish, where is a very ancient house that belonged to the Daniels, now seated at St. Margaret's juxta Marleborough.²

In the aisle aforesaid are two old scutcheons of this coate, Vert, a fess between 3 mullets A.³

STROWD belonged to the Montagus of Lackham. WOLMERE, formerly Wolvemere, is the property of Sir John Awdry of Notton. SANDRIDGE, for many years the property of Lord Audley, was bought by Mr. Thomas Bruges and Mr. E. Phillips. A new House has lately been erected here by Henry Lopez Esq.

¹ The tower of Melksham Church formerly stood in the centre. In 1845 it was taken down and removed to the West end. William Eyre of St. Thomas's Sarum, a public preacher silenced 1662 (Wood), was buried here. The Rectory of Melksham used to be in the gift of the Crown until King John granted it with all its appendages to the Canons of the Cathedral of Sarum, in the time of Bishop Herbert Poore, by Deed dated at Falaise in Normandy, 4th June 1200, (New Monasticon, Salisbury, Charter III.) The gift was charged with an annual bounty of £2 15s. 8d. to be distributed on the Anniversaries of King Hen. II. and III. among the attendants belonging to Sarum Cathedral. Edward Carne, Doctor of Decretals, was Vicar at the Survey of Hen. VIII. The Vicar of Melksham provides Curates for Seend and Earlstoke. [In the Calendar of Inq. p. M. the Advowson of Melksham is entered as belonging, 5 Hen. IV., to Sir Thomas Berkeley, and in 17 Hen. VI. to Richard Beauchamp Earl of Warwick: but Mildeston (now Milston, near Amesbury) which did belong to both those persons, seems to be the place intended.]

² Connected with "Bineger," properly Bean-acre, are found the names of, Maignard, 1274; Bluet, 1348. Then the Whittocksmede family, whose heiress Elizabeth married William Danyell of Cheshire. [Wilts. Visit. 1623, "Danyell."] The Danyells were succeeded as owners by the family of Selfe, a very ancient name at this town. William Selfe was on an Inquisition 38 Hen. III. (1253). The number of descendants of the venerable gentleman mentioned by Aubrey is not to be wondered at; for he had two sons and twelve daughters, all of whom were married. [Wilts. Visit. 1623.] The eldest son was represented by daughters. The second son Jacob Selfe died 1702, having been twice married. A descendant of the first marriage was wife of Thomas Smith of Shaw above-mentioned. The only child of the second marriage of Jacob Selfe was Isaac who married Penelope daughter of Charles Lord Lucas. Their daughter and ultimate sole heiress Ann, married Thomas Methuen of Bradford (d. 1733): from whom Beanacre has descended to the present Lord Methuen. The name of Selfe survives at a Farm near Rotteridge, and in a Parish charity. Their arms were, Ermine three chevrons G.

In the South aisle lyes Ambrose Dautesey, Sir John Dautesey's son of West Lavington Henry Brouncker, Esqr.¹

¹ The inscription on the brass plate formerly in the Church was as follows:—"Here lyeth buried the body of AMBROSE DAUNTESEY Esq., the eldest son of Sir John Dautesey, K^t. who had to wife Gartrude, the widow of Henry Brouncker, Esq^r., which lieth here buried by him, and died both within a year, and had by her four sons and two daughters. He deceased 29 Nov. 1612, a zealous Christian and well-beloved by all men."

The oldest Wiltshire family of the name of Dautesey were owners of the Manor of Dautesey in Hen. III. and Edw. I. [An ancient genealogy of them at that period is in a Deed in the Malmesbury Abbey Cartulary Add. MSS. 15667. pp. 38b. and 39.] At Dautesey the original family ended in an heiress Joan, (who married Sir John Stradling, and whose gravestone, 1455, is described above, p. 217, note 2). A branch of the family, living at Winterbourne-Dautesey near Salisbury in 1391, had half the Manor of Landford. [There was a slight difference in their coat-armour. The North Wilts Dauteseys used, three bars nebulé: those of South Wilts three bars dancetté.] From this Winterbourne-Dautesey branch came, it is believed, the Dauteseys who, about A.D. 1500, are found at West Lavington, both as freeholders, and as leaseholders under the See of Sarum. They were also proprietors within the Manor of Bremelridge in the parish of Westbury. William Dautesey, Alderman of London, by Will dated 10th March 1542 and proved the year following by his brother Ambrose, founded the School and Alms-houses in West Lavington; the foundation taking effect in 1553. The son of Ambrose and nephew of the Alderman was John Dautesey, who died 1559. [See Mr. E. Kite's Wilts Brasses, No. xxi., and p. 55.] The son of this John was Sir John Dautesey, Kt., Sheriff of Wilts 1595. He had a son Ambrose, of Melksham, who married Gertrude daughter of Sir Henry Sadleir of Everley, and widow of Henry Brouncker Esq. Ambrose Dautesey died 1612 before his father Sir John, who did not die until 1630) leaving, out of the six children mentioned in the above inscription, two daughters his coheirs, Elizabeth and Sarah. Elizabeth the eldest was second wife of Sir John Danvers the Regicide (see above p. 226); and was made by her grandfather Sir John Dautesey in 1630 his sole heir, "ex asse hæres," as stated on her monument, in the Dautesey chapel, on the South side of West Lavington Church. Henry, her only son by Sir John Danvers, dying in 1654, her two daughters Lady Purbeck and Lady Lee shared their mother's inheritance. Ultimately, the whole came into the possession of Lady Lee's son-in-law, the first Earl of Abingdon. During the last century, at various intervals, the estates in Wilts belonging to the Earls of Abingdon were sold by order of the Court of Chancery. At Littleton Paganell in West Lavington, and at Market Lavington, purchases were made by the ancestor of the Earl of Radnor. The ancient freehold of the Dauteseys at West Lavington, and the leaseholds held under the See of Sarum, were bought by George, Duke of Marlborough, who settled the same upon his second son, Lord Francis Spencer, afterwards created Baron Churchill, the father of the present possessor.

Taken by my brother Wm. Aubrey, April, 1680.

In the Chancell, on a plain altar-monument of free-stone: Of your charity pray

¹ In order to distinguish this Stoke (village) from others in the county, as Stoke-Verdon, Braden-stoke, Limpley-stoke, &c., it was called, at a very early period, Stoke-Comitis, or Earl's. But from what Earl it was so called, is not quite clear. In Domesday Book there is certainly a "Stoche" that belonged to the well-endowed Edward, Earl of Sarum; but that seems rather to refer to Braden-stoke: and further, if Earl-stoke had belonged to that Earl of Sarum, it would probably have descended either to the Longespée or Bohun family, which does not appear to have been the case. For in 3 Hen. III. (1218) Matthew Fitz-Herbert, son of one of the King's Justices was residing here, in a house which he had built; and towards the building of which he had been allowed timber out of the Royal Forest of Chippenham. He was duly succeeded here by legitimate descendants, though according to the modern usage of names, it would not be easy to recognize them as of one family. For instead of using one surname common to all, they each made a separate one for himself, out of the Christian name of his father or a predecessor; thus, after Matthew Fitz-Herbert, we have Herbert Fitz-Matthew, Peter Fitz-Herbert, John Fitz-Matthew, and finally Matthew Fitz-John. The latter was a great landowner in co. Devon. [See Lysons's Devon: p. 462, under "Stokenham."] For some reason which is variously explained, he surrendered his property to the Crown, but obtained in A.D. 1286, a grant from Edw. I. of Earlstone, Rowde, the Castle of Devizes, St. John's and St. Mary's Churches there, and Hackleston, co. Wilts, for his life: with a settlement of one third of Earlstone upon his widow Eleanor Fitz-John for her life. King Edward then gave Earlstone to his own daughter Joan "of Acre," wife, first of Gilbert Clare, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, and secondly of Ralph de Monthermer who so long as she continued his wife was allowed to use the titles of the first husband. Ralph Monthermer obtained the reversion of the estate for his son Thomas, whose daughter and heir Margaret brought it in marriage to John Montacute Sen. Kt., brother to William, second Earl of Salisbury. The ultimate heiress of Montacute married Richard Nevill, created Earl of Salisbury in 1442. On his death in 1460, it reverted to the heirs of Monthermer, and after them, in default of issue, to the Crown.

By Henry VIII Earlstone was granted to Henry Brouncker Esq. of Melksham, Sheriff of Wilts 1558. This gentleman's descendants, of the younger branch, obtained a certain celebrity. His second son Sir Henry was made Lord President of Munster, and was father of Sir William created Viscount Brouncker of Castle Lyons in Ireland. He had two sons, William, second Viscount Brouncker, President of the Royal Society, and Henry (afterwards third Viscount), the Gentleman of the Bedchamber to the Duke of York, who lost his seat in the House of Commons for misconduct in the naval action of 1665. But Earlstone never belonged to any one of the younger branch of this family. The Estate passed from Henry the purchaser to his eldest son Sir William Brouncker, Sheriff 1580 and M.P. for Wilts 1586, and successively to others of the elder line, some of whom represented Devizes and Westbury in Parliament.

On it are these Arms following:—

On the death of a Mr. Dautesey Brouncker in 1693, his estate was divided between two daughters his coheiresses: Katharine, wife of John Baynton Esq. (the last male owner of Bromham), and Anne, wife of James Townsend Jun. Esq. of Great Cheverell. Mr. Baynton's moiety was purchased by Sir George Heathcote, Alderman and M.P. for the City of London. He built a house, but very soon sold his property, either to Sir Peter Delmé (Lord Mayor 1723), or to his son of the same name. The Lord Mayor's grandson Peter Delmé of Titchfield House co. Southampton, (who died in 1789) sold it to Mr. Joshua Smith, who, with his brother Sir Drummond Smith, Bart., also bought the Manor of Edingdon and the several estates sold by the Trustees of Charles, Duke of Bolton, under an Act of Parliament 1784. The present House was built, in 1788, from the designs of George Stewart.

Of the other moiety of Dautesey Brouncker's estate some part was purchased by Mr. Joshua Smith. A portion still called "Brouncker's Farm" with a house called "Brouncker's Court" passed by the heiress of the Townsend family to Mr. Wadman of Imber. This was sold after Mr. Wadman's death to Mr. Simpson, and it now belongs to his daughter, the widow of Dr. Johnson, M.D. Mr. Joshua Smith was M.P. for Devizes. Being succeeded at his death in 1819 by daughters, all his estate was sold in the following year to the Trustees of Simon Taylor Esq. deceased. It devolved on that gentleman's niece and heiress, the wife of George Watson Esq. He took the addition of her name, and their son Simon Watson Taylor Esq., is now the resident proprietor. This beautiful place is described in "Neale's Views," and in "Britton's Beauties of Wilts," III., 356. It was lately occupied for several years by the Rt. Hon. Lord Broughton. The parish contains 2066 acres.

In this parish was born William Gough, mentioned by A. Wood (Ath: Oxon:) as an Anabaptist, of St. Alban's Hall, Oxon, author of "Londinum triumphans," and "An Essay on Trade" (Harl. Misc. xii. 250). He died 1682. He was son of William Gough of Christ Church Oxon, who after ejection from Inkpen, was a Nonconformist at Earlstoke, and whose father was the Rev. Edward Gough, Patron and Rector of Great Cheverell.

The Church (St. James) stands on low ground N. West of the House. The Tower, traditionally said to have been used by Sir William Brouncker as a mew for his hawks, has an Early English Tower Arch. Mr. Peter Delmé, sub-lessee of the great Tithes, rebuilt the chancel in 1778, but, it must be added, in a most unecclesiastical style. There is a monumental slab to William Brouncker, Catharine his wife, and four children. Arms, Brouncker impaling Moore.

¹ This monument, not now to be seen, stood on the North side of the Communion Table. It was probably removed when the chancel was rebuilt. In tracing the successive owners of Earlstoke, no allusion whatsoever being met with, to the Bulstrode family having ever been Lords of the Manor, this inscription, which seemed to be rather an awkward witness to that fact, was for a long time quite inexplicable. And so it would have continued to be, but for the accidental discovery of some old memoranda relating to Earlstoke, in the Library of the Society of Antiquaries. From these, written about 1765, it appears that the real words of the inscription were not, as William Aubrey had copied them, "Lord of this mannour," but—"Bollstryd and Edythe his wife, and, Lord, of thy mercy on them have pity, Amen."

² These four shields, then in the House, refer to Henry Brouncker of Melksham the purchaser, temp. Henry VIII. He was a member of the Hon. Company trading to Moscow: and was twice married. [Wilts. Visit., 1623]. The first wife was a Braybrooke, No 433. The second was Ursula, daughter of John Yate and Alice Hyde, No. 434. The sinister or wife's side of this shield seems to have been copied wrong by W. Aubrey. As it stands, it denotes Hyde and Yate as two wives. It should have been Yate quartering Hyde.

³ The ancient name appears to have been Paul's Holt (wood). It is so called in Testa de Nevill and in an Inquisition of 8 Edw. I.

The superior Lord in the reign of Hen. III. was Fitz-Alan, Earl of Arundell, under whose family, as of their Seignory of Keevil, two distinct estates appear to have been held in Paulsholt. The 1st, by the family of Burdon, from Hen. III. to c. 1361: when it passed by heiress to Thorpe. If the lands of the Thorpe family, at Paulsholt, followed the course of their manor of King's Teignton, co. Devon, they would have passed by heiress of Thorpe, c. 1509, to the ancestor of Lord Clifford. 2. Of the other estate, held originally under the Fitz-Alans, as of Keevil, Sifrewast was sub-tenant in H. III: and John "de Paulsholt" to 1331. The name of Willington (see p. 39) is once found here, 1396; and that of Sir John Lovell, jure uxoris Matilda Holand, 1407. In 1413, a Manor here belonged, at his death, to Sir Wm. Stourton, who had married the heiress of Moigne of Maddington. This was perhaps purchased, together with lands at West

There are severall brackish drawing-wells, but especially that of Ric. Bolwell, blacksmith; two quarts whereof, by evaporation, did yield a very tart salt two good spoonfulls heaped. Dr. Charles Merrott believeth it to be vitriolic. In the highway, towards (Marston) in a ditch, a mile from the Devizes, is a spring, which if you putt powder of Galls into it, presently becomes of a deep claret colour. In the ditches there is a kind of friable slatt, like Cornish slatt, lyeing bendwise, /// : it is extremely friable, and I believe abounds with vitriol, or perhaps rather with vitriol and nitre.²

Mem. All the low grounds of North Wilts abound with a sowre herbage, which makes it so proper for good cheese; the soyle of Cheshire is also of that nature. (? Ed.)

* Poulshot lies on the borders of the Oxford clay and Coral rag. Aubrey says (in N. H. of W. 74.) "Tis a wett, dirty place, and in the spring-time the inhabitants appear of a primrose complexion." The mineral spring of which he speaks is near "The Five Lanes," and its virtues are well known.

³ The older portion of the church is of Early English style. In the Chancel are several monuments to a family of White. Samuel White of Poulshot was buried in Bath Abbey Church 1663.

The Rectory has been in the gift of the Bishops of Salisbury so far back as A.D. 1297. Among the Incumbents have been Simon, Bishop of Connor 1459: William Hulle or Hill, who was also Rector of Edington Monastery, 1491: and Edw. Davenant (nephew of John, Bishop of Sarum) 1622. He resigned in favour of his wife's brother, William Grove, who was ejected from the Rectory "in the Troubles," 1644. [Aubrey, Lives ii. 298.] From 1680 to 1719, the Rector was Isaac, only son of the celebrated "Piscator," Walton, by Ann sister of Bishop Ken. The Bishop, after his deprivation, was frequently in retirement at Poulshot with his nephew, who was also Rector of Boscombe, a Canon of Salisbury, and Prebendary of Netheravon and Bishopston.

SEND vulgo SEENE.¹

In the Records in the Tower in London it is written Send.

This village is about a mile from the Spring at Poulshot before-mentioned. It is on a red-sandy hill, from whence it has its name, Sand in the Old English being called Send; as Send, a village in Surrey, on a sandy soil. In this, hill underneath the sand, is iron oare, and the richest that I have seen, for the smyth can make the

¹ The Manor of Seend, a member of the King's Manor of Melksham, was granted in Hen. III. to John de Cherbourg, probably a foreigner in the service of the Crown. With it he held Winterbourne Cherbourg, afterwards W. Gunnore. By his first wife Christiana Du Bois, he had a son Wygan de Cherbourg, who died owner 1282, leaving a son, John, then of age. But in Edw. II., with Upavon and other Wilts Manors, Seend was given to the favourites Despenser: and upon their attainder, to Edward Bohun, Earl of Hereford, 1330: whose son Humphrey had license, 1347, to embattle a manor-house here. On his death without issue male, it would have reverted to the Crown, but by surrender of a claim upon the King, of 2000 marks due for services, Humphrey's nephew, Humphrey, Earl of Northampton, secured it in his family. In the great division of the Bohun inheritance in 9 Hen. V. (1421) between the two heiresses, Mary wife of the Duke of Lancaster (King Hen. IV.) and the Lady Anne Plantagenet, Countess of Stafford, Seend fell to the share of the latter. She married secondly William Bourchier, Earl of Ewe in Normandy, to whose son John, Lord Bourchier de Berners, it belonged at his death in 14 Edw. IV. (1474). His son John second Lord Berners (sometimes written Barnes, whence Alton-Barnes in this county), the Governor of Calais and translator of Froissart, had some natural daughters, one of whom Ursula was first wife of William Sherington (the purchaser of Lacock Nunnery). Seend was settled, to the use (after Lord Berners' death) of Sherington and this wife, and their children. She died s. p. So, by will 1532 Lord Berners desired his reversion in the Manor to be sold, except to the value of Ten pounds a year which he bequeathed to his son George Bourchier; the rest to be applied by the executors for his soul's wealth. [Test. Vet., 658.]

The Tything of Seend-row belonged to Ambresbury Nunnery. William Sherington, above-mentioned, purchased some monastic land at Seend and Seend Row, which (as at Bowden), in the division between the two heiresses of his brother Sir Henry (see Lacock) fell to the share of Lady Mildmay, and so came to her son-in-law, Francis Fane, Earl of Westmoreland: whose family sold it in parcels at various times during the 17th century.

The family of Awdry of Seend, whose first known ancestor in this county was the Rev. John Awdry, Vicar of Melksham 1601—39, to which he was presented through the interest of the Brounckers, have been resident landowners in the parish of Seend for about 200 years. Their estate previously belonged to Wadman. A House near the Church was built by Mr. Thomas Bruges of Melksham, who died 1835 and bequeathed his name and the property he had formed to his nephew the late William Heald Ludlow Bruges Esq. Recorder of Devizes, sometime M.P. for that Borough, and for Bath; who died September 1855.

oare he takes up in the street melt in his forge, which the oare in the Forest of Deane will not do. In the street, where the sand has been worn and washed away, the oare appears after a shower, and it glisters when the sun shines. Melksham Forest reached to the foot of this hill. It was full of good oakes, which were cut down about 1634, and sold for.....per load, and nobody then ever tooke notice of this iron oare, which every sunshiney day, after a shower, glistered in their eies; now there are very few oakes left in this parish, or thereabout, and so this rich mine cannot be melted.¹ Finding this plenty of oare, I presently concluded that I should find here some water impregnated with it, and tried some wells with powder of galls, with which infusion the wells of the South side did turne; the North side not. The principall well is that belonging to Mr. John Sumner,² which upon infusion with galles, immediately became as black as inke, so that I could write with it to reade it. Neither Tunbridge water, nor any other iron water I ever could meet with, would doe the like.³

* Mr. Alderman Gomelton, of London, assured me that Tunbridge waters in Kent, were first used by Mr. Dudley North, Grandfather, or Great Uncle, to my Lord Chief Justice North, which is fitt to be remembred.

² Of this family was Mistress Joan Sumner, to whom, as he elsewhere says, "in an evil hour," Aubrey made his first address in 1665. [See Wilts Arch. Mag. iv. 97—104.] About the beginning of the last century an Edward Sumner of Seend died without issue. His niece, who became his heir, was Mary daughter of Daniel Webb of Monkton Farley. She married Sir Edward Seymour who (on the extinction of the Dukedom in the younger branch) succeeded as Eighth Duke of Somerset in 1749. Their third son Lord William Seymour, who married Hester, heiress of John Maltravers of Melksham, lived at Seend. The house which he occupied (since rented by the late Mr. Daubeney) was bought from the Duke of Somerset, after Lord William's death, by Mr. Thomas Bruges. Over the door is the shield of Sumner, Vert, a fess dancetté ermine. There are three achievements of the Seymours in Seend Church.

Mem. Mr. Fr. Lodwyck told me that mention is made in some of our Histories, that King Hen. 7. was in exile some time, and lived at the Duke of Burgundy's Court. The staple for our Wool was then at Calais, and 'twas manufactured by the Walloons. When he came to the Crown he sent for a number of them to come into England, to sett up the cloathing trade there, and Mr. Lodwyck says the history says, that they were settled in Wiltshire, and that there are still several of their descendants with Dutch and French names. I remember one Mr. Goupy,¹ and I had to do with a merchant of his name at Tours. I remember I heard them say, that heretofore this was a great place of Cloathing, sc. about 90 and more years since. I have now forgott the reason of their removal hence to Trubridge.² The good houses here were built by the Cloathiers; I know not any small country village that has so many well built houses.

In the church here, which is a chapel of ease to Melksham, in the north aisle, which by tradition was built by the family of Stokys, is this Epitaph:

Here lyth John Stokys, and Alys, his wof, whiche
John decessed ye XXXX day of June, the yere of our Lord God thousand CCCCLXXXXIII.
On whose sowlys Ihu have mercy. Amen.

They lye under a flatt marble stone, in which are both their pourtraictures in brasse, with the Inscription aforesaid, but there is no escutcheon.³

In this Church has been a great deale of painted glasse, with pictures of some of the Stokys' children, but beaten down by one William Sumner, of this parish, about the yeare 1648. There is not now one escutcheon in the Church remaining. Mem. In the high windowes in the nave of this Church, a figure in glass, and inscription in the margins underneath, which for want of a short telescope I could not read.¹

² In his Natural History of Wilts, p. 112, he conjectures the main reason to have been that the water at Seend was not proper for the fulling and washing of their cloth: "because, being impregnated with iron, it gave the white cloth a yellowish tincture."

Mem. At the bottome of an arch, at the partition between the Church and Chancell, is carved in stone this figure, which I take notice of, for the hat's sake; which fashion I think came in about Hen. 8. [Pl. xxix. No. 436.]

¹ On the battlements of Seend Church, North side, are these devices. 1. A Rudder, for PAVELY of Brook House. 2. Three sickles interlaced, HUNGERFORD. 3. BOURCHIER's Knot. 4. Some animal's head very rudely cut.

² This is a very small parish of about 438 acres of land. The situation corresponds with the Anglo-Saxon words hwæd little, dun hill. There is another place of the name in the parish of Alderbury in South Wilts: and in Cox's "Magna Britannia," a long account of the latter is, (by a confusion not uncommon in that book), attributed to Whaddon in the Hundred of Melksham.

In Domesday Survey Wadone was held under the Crown by a military Thane, one Aluric, who had been owner in the Confessor's time. In Hen. III. and Edw. I. the family name of the owner is not recoverable, as he is only called Henry de Whaddon. He held part under the Earl of Sarum, who held under the Crown as of the Honour of Trowbridge: and part under Humphrey de Escovill who was owner, under the same tenure, of Hilperton.

In 1342—51 the owner of the manor, and Patron of the Living, was Sir John de Holt, Kt. This person whose family name is also lost under that of the neighbouring manor of Holt, is mentioned in the "Wilts Archæol. Mag." I. p. 280. On his seal appended to a Deed, are these arms, Semée of fleurs de lys, 3 lions rampant.

In 1282 Thomas Gore, of the Alderton family, was patron of the Living: but probably only for the turn by purchase. In the folio MS. of Gore documents belonging to Mr. Poulett Scrope, there is no allusion to that family having ever been owners of the manor of Whaddon. In 1401 Sir John Roche was owner. By one of his daughters and coheiresses it passed to the Beauchamps, and from them on the failure of issue, to the Bayntons. In 1538 Sir Edward Baynton of Bromham House was Lord of the manor; but about 1543 by purchase, partly from the Bayntons, and partly from the Stourton family, it became the property of Mr. Thomas Long of Trowbridge, from whom it has descended to the present owner, Walter Long Esq., of Rood Ashton. Whaddon House was taken down about 1835. The Church is of very old foundation: the doorway and capitals of the chancel arch being Transition from Saxon. The Living is now united with Hilperton. About 1644 William Shipman was ejected from this Rectory. Among the Add. MS. in the British Museum (No. 15561, xi.) is "The Answer of Martin Brunker and others to the Rev. William Shipman about his performance of Divine Service."

¹ No Hundred of the name of Potterne appears, either in the Hundred Rolls of Hen. III. and Edw. I., or in the "Nomina Villarum" of 9 Edw. II. In those Documents the parishes now included in the Hundred of Potterne and Cannings are registered as lying, in a Half-Hundred called "Roubergh Episcopi," and in the Hundred of "Cannings Episcopi:" the Bishop of Sarum having the lordship of both. The other Half-Hundred of Roubergh was called "Roubergh Regis," and is now, nearly all, included in that of Swanborough.

The general topography of Potterne and Cannings Hundred has been recently assisted by "The History Military and Municipal of the Borough of Devizes, 1859;" and by the "Historical Memoirs of the Parish of Bishop's Cannings," a contribution by Archdeacon Macdonald to the Wilts Archæol. Mag., Vol. IV. p. 121.

The only parish touched upon by Aubrey in the single Volume of his MS. now to be found, is that of Rowde. If he made Collections for any others, they were probably in the missing "Liber B." The Editor's comments being therefore limited to Rowde, he must for the present omit the rest of the Hundred. But there is one point connected with its principal town, upon which, as it has often been discussed, he would take this opportunity of making a suggestion, viz.: as to the meaning of the name now written and pronounced "Devizes."

DEVIZES. That it is a word of Latin origin, and that "Castrum ad Divisas" (the Castle at the Divises), was one of the oldest and commonest Latin names given to the Castle built here in the reign of Hen. I., will perhaps be allowed. The word "divisa" (divided) is a past participle, and, as such, would properly require to be joined with a substantive, as terra. But, like the word "premises" (i.e. terræ præmissæ), and others, it grew by familiarity to be considered as an independent noun: and as a noun was commonly used, not by classical, but by mediæval Latinists.

Of its use, there are many instances, chiefly in the Monastic charters.

1. In John of Glastonbury's description of the bounds of "Glastonbury xii. Hides" (printed in New Monasticon, I. 23, No. 1.) the word "divisæ" occurs in one and the same document no less than eight times. 1. "Hinc in divisas de Bikenham et Ferlege." 2. "In divisis fossati." 3. "Usque ad Litelnie quæ est divisa de Martinescie." 4. Per divisas insulæ." 5. "Per divisas de Ceddre." 6. "Deinde usque ad divisas de Mere et Poulton." 7. "Et sic per illas divisas versus orientem." 8. "Per divisas de Andredesey."

2. In the same Abbey Register (New Monasticon, p. 35), "Super insulam juxtà divisas, &c., A.D. 1261.

3. In the partition of Godeney Moor (ditto p. 52,) "Ita quod Abbas habeat in longitudine illius divisæ:" where the word seems to signify one of the moieties. A.D. 1283.

4. In an Ivy-Church charter (New Monasticon, No. 3); "Totam prædictam placeam infrà divisas prædictas, &c." A.D. 1256.

5. In the Book of the Priory of Bath (Lincoln's Inn Library, No. xlv., Art. 4), is mention of lands between the "divisas de Corston" (near Bath) "et Wodensdiche."

6. In a Deed relating to Stansal in South Yorkshire, dated A.D. 1236, the boundaries are described: "De illâ fossâ usque ad divisas de Wadworth:" and again, "Ad terram arabilem de Stansall et divisas de Wadworth." [Hunter's South Yorkshire, I., p. 247].

7. "The whole Manor of New Hall within the divisas of Darfield." [Ditto, Vol. II., p. 112].

8. Sir Thomas Fairfax, describing the march of his troops in 1642, says that "he passed to Thorne, and then across the devises of Hatfield to Crowle." Here, in its English form which is very rare, the word is considered by the late Mr. Hunter to mean Border-lands. [Ditto, Vol. I., p. 74].

9. Jacob (Law Dictionary) under "Divisa," says, "Sometimes it is taken for the bounds or limits of a parish, or farm, &c., as 'divisas perambulare,' to walk the bounds of a parish: in which sense it has been extended to the division between countries, and given names to towns, as to the Devizes in Wiltshire, situated on the confines of the West Saxon and Mercian Kingdoms." [But of any town so called from lying on the frontier between countries, or of this particular one having separated Wessex from Mercia, Mr. Jacob produces no evidence].

10. Bracton, Fleta, and R. Hoveden, are said to use the word for Boundary. [Davies's Origines Divisianæ, p. 6].

11. "S. Maria de Divisis" was in early charters, the name of Pipewell Abbey, co. Northampton. The historians of that county cannot explain the reason, but only conjecture that some ancient partition gave rise to the name.

From these instances it appears that the word "divisæ" was used to signify, either 1. Lands parted between two proprietors, or 2. Border-lands, or 3. (which is by far the most frequent sense), Boundaries.

To apply this to Devizes. Were there boundaries of any sort at this place in ancient times: and if so, were they boundaries of kingdoms, provinces, shires, hundreds, parishes or manors?

No authority has ever been produced to show that any limit either of a British Kingdom, or of a Roman Province ever passed over, or by, this place. (In the latter case the more classical name of "Ad Fines" would probably have been used). As to the Saxon period, it does not anywhere appear that Devizes was ever the boundary of the Shire of Wilts. We are therefore driven to look for some subordinate partition, either between Hundreds, or, on a still smaller scale, between Manors and Parishes. And it is after all in the one or the other of these, that the explanation of the matter is most likely to be found, because all the instances above produced (and produced in detail, for this very purpose), show that the word divisa was not used in the case of the larger, but only in that of the less important kinds of partition.

1. As a boundary between Hundreds. It may be mentioned that there is already an instance of the word divisæ having been used precisely in this sense in speaking of another place in the county of Wilts. In an ancient Survey of Braden Forest, the limit "runs from East to West, including the Mill of Mighall, Baillard's Ash, and the Tres Divisas," i.e.: a spot at the point of union of the Three Hundreds of Kingsbridge, Highworth, and Malmesbury." "This" (says Mr. J. Y. Akerman) "suggests the origin of the town of Devizes, which probably once stood at the junction of ancient boundaries obliterated in an age long past, and of which no record remains. [Archæologia, xxxvii., p. 50].

It is however not so easy to obliterate all record of old boundaries. Owners vanish quickly enough, but rights, and the limits that define them, are more enduring. It is the fact, that certain local distinctions of territory observed here at this very day, are exactly the same as they were at the time when the Castle was built. Further, they are precisely of that sort which would have been rendered into Latin in those days by the word "divisæ." These are submitted to the reader's eye in the annexed Plan.

All that is now included in the "Borough of Devizes" was formerly a Castle and its Demesne. The Eastern portion of the Borough runs into, and is enclosed on three sides by lands in the Parish of Bishop's Cannings. In a similar manner, the Western portion of the Borough is very closely pursued by, lands in the Parish of Potterne. Both these parishes were Manors belonging to Bishop Roger the builder of the Castle. Nothing appears to be known of any other name here before that time, nor has the name (Ad Divisas) been met with before it is given to the Borough by William of Malmesbury, a historian contemporary with the Bishop who built it. From the peculiar way in which the Demesne (now the Borough), appears to trespass upon the other Manors, it would seem to be not improbable that, in forming it, the Bishop took the Eastern part from Bishop Cannings, the Western from Potterne.

ROWDE.

Insert this in Liber B, or bring that hither.

In the highway here is a spring called Stockwell: on both sides of the way are gravelly cliffs, which in dry weather are candied white; it turnes not with gall powder, which were it vitriol it would: I hope it may have the effect of Epsham water. The sediment by precipitation is almost a perfect white Nitre. The inhabitants tell me that it is good for the eyes, and washes very well, and that it used for making medicines.

At the fall of the leafe the water in the ditches hereabout looks blewish.¹

If this was so; then, Bishop's Cannings on the East was in one Hundred, that of Cannings: whilst Potterne on the West was in another, the Old Hundred of Roubergh Episcopi. Consequently, the Western walls of the Bishop's new Castle must have almost touched the divisa that separated the two Hundreds.

2. As a boundary between Manors. Before Bishop Roger, out of the two Manors, Bishop's Cannings and Potterne, belonging to his See, thus, (as we may conceive,) enclosed his Demesne, the boundary lines of those two Manors, and that of a third, the King's Manor of Rowde, met at one point. At that particular point, (in those days, literally "ad tres divisas,") stood the Castle which the Bishop built.

From this peculiarity of situation; that is, on the dividing line between Two Hundreds, and, at the Meeting of Three Manors, possibly arose the name of "Castrum ad Divisas."

¹ This Manor, under the name of "Villa de Rudes," was demesne of the Crown in A.D. 1275 [Hund. Rolls, ii. 236], and was sometimes granted out for life, with the Constablership of the Castle of Devizes, and the Forests of Chippenham and Melksham, &c. It was thus held by Plessetis, Earl of Warwick (Hen. III.), Matthew Fitz-John (Edw. I.), Sir Edmund Hungerford 1455, and Richard Beauchamp Bishop of Sarum. When in hand of the Crown it was generally dower of the Queens of England. Under the Queen it was leased to a "Farmer of the Manor," the last of whom was Robert Maundrell, 27 Eliz. (1584). (The martyr burnt at the stake at Salisbury 1556 was John, son of Robert Maundrell of Rowde.) Before 1597 it had been perpetually alienated to Sir Edward Hungerford of Farley Castle, who died 1607. His widow re-married Francis Manners, sixth Earl of Rutland, who held for his life about 1158 acres, and received Quit Rent for various Assart lands. In the Hungerford Rent Roll (in the writer's possession) all names of tenants, &c., are given. The principal occupier of the "Site of the Manor," at that time was Wm. Norden.

The Reversioner, after the death of the Earl and Countess of Rutland, was Edward Hungerford, then a Minor, (afterwards Sir Edward the Parliamentary Officer), son of Sir Anthony Hungerford of Black-Bourton, and Stock, (near Bedwyn.) The following letter from Sir Anthony relates to an Enclosure of a Common Field, which appears to have been contemplated about the year of its date, 1619.

"To Robert Flower and John Lewes, These;
At Rowde.

Whereas there hath bin a generall agreement by yo^r selves and all the Tennants Free-houlders of the Mannor of Rowde, as likewise the Parsonn there, for the Inclosing of your Common Field, Whereunto my Lord Rutland by his Steward and Mr. Pewe his Officer, and my Selfe in the behalfe of my Sonne, have given our assent. Since which time as well yourselves as the rest of the Inhabitants there whome this concerneth, have submitted your selves to the judgement of fower personnes equally named to see that everie weann (one) in this part might respectivelie have what of righte pertaines unto him, whoe beinge nowe willinge to doe their best endeavours to this purpose: It is said that you two onellie, contrarie to your former assents, doe now intend to interrupt the worke: the which if you shall persever to doe I presume you will be enforced to make good your former agreement with your Charge and trouble: I doe therefore wishe you for the avoydinge of bothe, quicklie to joyne with your Neighbours in this Worke, the rather for that I conceive you shall reape benifitt by this Inclosure as well as others. And soe I recomend you to God. From Stocke this xxth of Januarie 1619. Your loveinge Friend,

ANTH: HUNGERFORD."

Sir Edw. Hungerford, the Parliamentary officer, died owner 1648. His arms with his wife (Halliday) on a scutcheon of pretence, are on the third bell: which however was given after his death, as the date is 1654. Rowde is named in the Will of his half-brother and successor Anthony 1657: by whose son the last Sir Edward it was most likely sold. Francis Eyles (of South Wilts notoriety) was owner 1721. Mr. Delmé 1770.

The estate at Rowdeford formerly belonged to Mr. Richard Tuck, who resided there: afterwards to Mr. Wyatt, of whom it was purchased by the late Mr. Wadham Locke, father of the present owner Francis A. S. Locke Esq. Sheriff of Wilts 1858, of Rowdeford House. The House stands in the parish of Bromham.

Some part of Rowde was held 39 Hen. III. by the serjeantry of providing the King, or, in his absence, the Constable of Devizes Castle, with hawks from Michaelmas to Lent.

"Foxangre" in this parish was given by the Empress Maud to Monkton Farley Priory.

The Rectory was anciently in the Crown: when enjoyed by a subject, as by Walter de Lech and Robert de Chaucy in Hen. III., the rector nominated a vicar. In 1377 the Tithes had been appropriated to Stanley Abbey: and at the Dissolution were bought by the Baynton family of Bromham, whose successors at Spy Park have since presented to the Vicarage. The Church was rebuilt but the tower, was rebuilt in 1833.

Of Ferdinando Warner, a very voluminous writer, vicar here 1730, there is a memoir in Chalmers's Biog. Dict. He is said to have declared (according to a, probably foolish, story) that he wrote his "Ecclesiastical History" and his "Dissertation on the Common Prayer," three volumes, both the original and corrected copies, with one single pen, which was an old one when he began, and when he finished was not worn out. His son Dr. John Warner, Rector of Stourton, died 1800. Of William Higginson, vicar 1808, and his family, there is a notice in Baker's Northamptonshire, "Gretworth," p. 510.

Above St. Edith's marsh, (now corrupted into Titty-marsh,) a Mosaic pavement was discovered about 1660. [Mon. Brit.] This was opened again a few years ago.

Some extracts from the Rowde Registers were printed in the Devizes Gazette, 25th July 1858.

BISHOPSTON.

THIS place as the name imports, belongs to the Bishopric of Sarum.² The mannour is now leased to a Layman, and he again lets estates to his Tenants, who all do him yearly this service for their lands as followeth. Every plow or teame at three dayes warning, makes, in the husbandman's phrase, three journeys; i.e. plougheth three days for the Lord, at 2d. a day, and bread and cheese gratis. At wheat harvest every messuage is bound, likewise at three days warning, to maintaine a reaper. These breake their fast at their owne and afterwards are entertained at the Lord's, charge, viz. at dinner every man hath a pound of beefe, a pound of mutton, a handfull of salt and fower pound of bread, and among all a barrell of beer. This is brought to them into the field; at evening they all come to the mannour house, and again every man hath four pounds of bread, one pound of cheese, and a candle (? caudle), or a cuppe of beare.

Here is an old seate, called "Hocker bench," hewn out of the side of a banke near the Maypole where they keepe their revelling. It is probably so called from the ancient Saxon custome of Hocking at Hocktide, for joy of the death of the

² This Bishopston belonged to the See of Sarum; Bishopston in South Wilts to that of Winchester. At the Muster in 1538, the archers, &c., from this parish were supplied by the Bishop of Sarum, Lady Darell and William Wroughton. When Church property was confiscated in 1647—51 the episcopal Manor was sold to John Oldfield and Matthew Cendrick for £2261 16s. 2d. The Lordship of the Manor is now in Lord Holland's family. An old Manor House was taken down in 1860. The Vicarage was a Peculiar in the gift of the Prebendary of Bishopston, now in the gift of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. Of the early Prebendaries there is a list in the "Antiquities of Salisbury, and Bath Abbey Church, p. 315."

Tyrant Hardicanute the Dane.¹ Hither the ancient and graver men, calling themselves Aldermen of Hocker-bench, resort to keep good order and be spectators of the dancing and pastime of the younger. Mem. There is a Hocker-bench likewise at Hartwell in Barkshire: ideò quære.

Near unto this place, as the indigenæ informe me, was sometimes a Sanctuary called Paradise, whither whosoever fled he was free from all arrests.

In the Church here hath been very fine painted glasse, but all broken by the Parliament soldiers in the late civil warres; one window only, viz. that in the East end of the North aisle, escaping the fury of the puritanical zealots. In it are three women saints, each standing in a nich of curious architecture. That in the first columnne holds a sword reversed in her right hand, a book expanded in her left. That in the middle I suppose to be the B.V. On an escroll at her feet . . . Sca. Mar. ora pro nobis.....The figure in the third columnne holds two baskets in her right hand, and a booke as aforesaid in her left. In the limbe of the same window say qui istam fenestram fieri fecit.....At the top of the third columnne in the same window this coate [Pl. xxix. No. 437]. Some device in a shield at the top of the first columnne, viz. Argent, over a Starre of 6 points proper, an Eagle rising Argent. [No. 438.] Another broken in the middle columnne.

In the third columnne of the last window in the same aisle, a saint's head broken off, the upper garment is seminated all over with these letters, H within a circle [No. 440]. On both sides of the same saint, these words counterly varied Ēhu m at the foot of the same saint, M on a shield within a circle Or. [No. 441.]

Some device in a shield in the East window of the South aisle, Argent, a birde rising.....in base, but metall upon metall.²

² i.e. False heraldry. The same remark applies to shield 438. In the South Aisle window the device described by Aubrey, and some other portions of stained glass remain. The three shields, which he saw in the North Aisle, have perished.

Bishopston Church has a fine peal of bells, a beautiful Norman door outside the chancel on the North side, and a rich battlement on the Nave.

In the South aisle is an opening through the wall into the Chancell; over it winds up a small pair of stairs, at the top of which is a (diamond-shaped) peepe-hole like this into the Chancell: [No. 442].

In the nave of the Church, beneath his picture on a brasse plate affixed to a marble, this following inscription: Of your charite pray for ye Soule of Harry Preci, which Harry decesid the ix day of Juli, the yeare of our Lord God M.V. XXXIX. on whose soule Jhu habe merci, Amen.

This on a marble near the altar:

"Having finished her course, here resteth the body of EDITH, wife of CHRISTOPHER WILLOUGHBY of London, Merchant, late Sheriffe of this Countie, who deceased this life the 15th of August, 1670."

A monument likewise erected to her on the wall; the escutcheon within a mantle, thus: [No. 439] WILLOUGHBY quartering [BEKE. See "Brook House," and No. 555].

"Hic obdormiscit in pace EDETHA Christ. Willoughby Armig: Lond: conjux charissima: apud Alvington in Agro Glocest: nata An. 1607: ubi libras annuatim solvend. pauperibus legavit. Lond. translata matrimonium contraxit 1634. Desponsum absentem apud exteros (negotiis mercatoriis versantem) æquo tulit animo per Annos 6: matrimonium contractum tunc sacrum consummavit 1640. Maritum inde ad Indos navigantem summo expectavit desiderio per Annos 6½. Redeuntem tandem (sorte suâ contentum) mutuo conjugali fruuntur solatio invicem felices. Fœmina erga Deum pia, egenos benigna, voti conjugalis semper observantissima, amicis fidelis, omnibus dilecta: Obiit Æræ Xtianæ 1670, Ætatis suæ 63. Cujus memoriæ hoc sacravit Maritus mœrens."¹

Nota. That about An. Dni. 1657 Mr. Gilbert Keate, Lord of this manor under the Bishop, gave 4 pounds per annum to fower poor people: (i.e. to each of the four. Ed.) Since, the estate is sold to Christopher Willoughby, Esqr. Merchant.²

¹ From this odd inscription it appears that immediately after a contract of matrimony, Mr. Willoughby went abroad on mercantile business and was absent six years: that on his return the marriage was completed: that he then went away again for six years and a quarter more, but that upon his second return the domestic life was resumed, and continued without further interruption. He was a proprietor here in 1639—40: and by Indenture 8th June 1680, he conveyed the Tithes of Clinch in the parish of Milton Lislebonne (formerly Milton Abbot's) near Pewsey in this county, for various charitable purposes, chiefly for the benefit of Bishopston. His own epitaph in the church mentions that he was "infelix in secundis nuptiis."

² Gilbert Keate was of London: and his son Sir Jonathan, of the Hoo, co. Hertford, (then a Knight, created Baronet 1660) was the chief proprietor in 1639—40.

ABURY.

IN an old MS. at Mr. Bayliffe's (of Monkton near Chippenham,) it is written Auberia.

(From the "Monumenta Britannica," now in the Bodleian Library.¹)

I was inclined by my Genius from my childhood, to the love of antiquities: and my Fate dropt me in a countrey most suitable for such enquiries.

Salisbury-plaines and Stonehenge I had known from eight years old: but I never saw the Countrey about Marleborough till Christmas 1648: being then invited to the Lord Francis Seymour's, by the Honorable Mr. Charles Seymour, then of Allington near Chippenham, since Lord Seymour, with whom I had the honor to be intimately acquainted, and whose Friendship I ought to mention with a profound respect to his memorie. There was my honoured friend and neighbour Colonel John Penruddock of Compton Chamberlayne, and that good old gentleman Mr. Stephen Bowman, Steward to the Lord Marquesse of Hertford; we went together and Mr. Levet, &c.

The morrow after Twelfday, Mr. Charles Seymour and Sir William Button Tokenham, Baronet, mett with their packs of hounds at the Grey-Wethers. The Downes look as if they were sown with great Stones, very thick; and in a due evening they looke like a flock of Sheep: from whence it takes its name: one may fancy it to have been the scene where the giants fought with huge stones against the Gods. 'Twas here that our game began, and the chase lead us, at length, thore the village of Aubury, into the closes there: where I was wonderfully surpris at the sight of those vast stones, of w^{ch} I had never heard before: as also at the mighty Bank and graffe (ditch) about it. I observed in the inclosure some segments of rude circles, made with these stones, whence I concluded, they had been in the old time complete. I left my company a while, entertaining mysele with a more delightfull indagation: and then steered by the cry of the Hounds, overtooke the company, and went with them to Kynnet, where was a good hunting-dinner provided. Our repast was cheerfull, which being ended, we remounted and beat over the downs with our grey-hounds. In this afternoon's diversion I happened to see Wensditch (sic for Wansdyke), and an old camp, and two or three sepulchres. The evening put a period to our sport, and we returned to the Castle at Marleborough, where we were nobly entertained; juvat hæc meminisse. I think I am now the only surviving gentleman of that company.

In the year 1655 was published by Mr. Web, a book intituled "Stonehenge Restored," but writt by Mr. Inigo Jones; which I read with great delight. There is a great deale of learning in it, but having compared his scheme with the monument itself, I found he had not dealt fairly, but had made a Lesbian's rule, which is verb. See Erasmi Adagia. conformed to the stone; * that is, he framed the monument to his own hypothesis, which is much differing from the thing itself.¹ This gave me an edge to make more researches; and a farther opportunity was, that my honored and faithfull friend Colonell James Long, of Draycot, since Baronet, was wont to spend a week or two every autumnne at Aubury in hawking, where several times I have had the happiness to accompany him. Our sport was very good, and in a romantick countrey, sc.; the prospects noble and vast, the downs stock't with numerous flocks of sheep, the turfe rich and fragrant with thyme and burnet.

His Ma^{tie} then commanded me to v a Description of it, and present it to him: and the Duke of Yorke commanded to give an account of the old Camps and Barrows on the Plaines.

but by Bookes; and for that I had scarcely seen hitherto any Antiquitie which did not either fall short of Fame or exceeded it; I was for relying on my own eie-sight; and would not sett forth this Treatise, (or) committ this Discourse to the press, till I had taken a journey into North Wales to consider that, and another called Kerrig y Drewen. But I never had the opportunity to undertake that journey; but (1692²) lately, my worthy friend Mr. Edward Lhuyd, Custos of the Musæum in Oxford, hath made accurate Observations of the Antiquities in Wales, which I have quoted out of his annotations to Camden's Britannia. Also I expected an account of such temples in Scotland, by the help of Sir Robert Moray, but his death did put a stop to the Edition; till in the year 1692 I had the happiness to correspond with the learned Dr. James Garden, Professor of Theologie at Aberdene.

There have been several books writt by learned men concerning Stoneheng, much differing from one another, some affirming one thing, some another. Now I come in the rear of all by comparative arguments to give a clear evidence that these monuments were Pagan Temples; which was not made out before: and have also, with humble submission to better judgments, offered a probability, that they were Temples of the Druids.

When a traveller rides along by the ruins of a Monastery: he knows by the manner of building, sc. Chapell, Cloysters. &c., that it was a Convent, but of what Order, sc. Benedictine, Dominican, &c., it was, he cannot tell by the bare view. So it is cleer that all the monuments, which I have here recounted were Temples. Now my presumption is, That the Druids being the most eminent Priests, or Order of Priests, among the Britaines; 'tis odds, but that these ancient monuments, sc. Aubury, Stonehenge, Kerrig y Druid &c., were Temples of the Priests of the most eminent Order, viz., Druids, and it is strongly to be presumed, that Aubury, Stoneheng, &c., are as ancient as those times. This enquiry, I must confess, is a groping in the dark: but although I have not brought it into a cleer light yet I can affirm that I have brought it from an utter darkness, to a thin mist, and have

These Antiquities are exceeding old that no bookes doe reach them, so that there is no way to reach them but by comparative antiquitie, which I have writt upon the spott from the monuments themselves. ‘Historia quoquo modo scripta, bona est ;’ and though I have writt, as I rode, a gallop, yet the novelty of it, and the faithfulness of the delivery may make some amends for the uncorrectness of the style.¹ The first draught is worn out with time and handling; and now, methinkes, after many years lying dormant, I come abroad like the ghost of one of those Druids.

I beg the reader's pardon for running this preface into a storie, and wish him much pleasure in the reading them, as I had in the seeing them. Vale.

method, by comparing them that I have seen one with another, and reducing them to a kind of *Æ*quation; so being but an ill orator myself, to make the stones give evidence for themselves.

I shall proceed gradually, a notioribus ad minus nota, that is to say, from y^e Remaines of Antiquity less imperfect to the more imperfect and ruinated; wherefore I must first treat of that vast and ancient monument called Aubury in Wiltshire.

AUBURY.

Aubury is four miles west from Marleborough in Wiltshire, and is peradventure the most eminent and entire monument of this kind in the Isle of Great Britaigne. Or thus: I doe take this old ill-shaped monument to be the greatest, most considerable, and the least ruinated of any of this kind in our British Isle. It is very strange that so eminent an Antiquitie should lye so long unregarded by our Chorographers: Mr..... only names it.¹

It is environed (see Pl. I.) with an extraordinary great vallum, or Rampart, as great, and as high as that at Winchester: w^{ch} is the greatest Bulwark that I have seen. Within which is a Graffe (ditch) of a depth and breadth proportionable to it: wherefore it could not be designed for a Fortification, for then the Graffe would have been on the outside of the Rampart.

From (West) entrance at a to (East) at β is sixty paces [read perches; as on Plan].

From the (South) entrance at γ to that (North) at δ the same distance: the breadth of the rampart is fower perches; and the breadth of the Graff the same distance.

Round about the Graffe, sc. on the edge or border of it, are pitched on end huge stones, as big, or rather bigger than those at Stoneheng: but rude, and unhewen as they are drawn out of the earth: whereas those at Stoneheng are roughly hewen.

¹In the rough copy he had written "Camden;" but in the corrected copy of his MS. he leaves the name out. Abury is not named in any edition of Camden that Aubrey could have seen. In Holland's translation of Camden, it is mentioned; but the passage was inserted by the Translator. All that Leland says of this place is, "Selbiri hille botom, wherby hath ben camps and sepultures of men of warre, as at Aibyri a myle off, and in dyvers places of the playne."

Most of the stones, thus pitched on end, are taken away: only here and there doe still remain some curvilinear segments: but by these one may boldly conclude, that heretofore they stood quite round about, like a Crowne;

Ovid's Fastor. lib. v. l. 131.

'sed longa vetustas
Destruit, et saxo longa senecta nocet.'

Within this circumvallation are also yet remaining segments, of a roundish figure,

* His Majestie commanded me to digge at the bottom of the stones marked with the fig. 1, to try if I could find any human bones: but I did not doe it.

of two—as I doe conjecture—Sacella, one the fig. 1,* the other fig. 2, and their ruines are not unlike Ariadne's Crowne: and are no neerer to a perfect circle than is that Constellation.† So within our Christian churches are severall Chapelles respective to such or such a Saint: and the like might have been in the old time.

This old monument does as much exceed in greatness the so renowned Stoneheng, as a Cathedral doeth a parish Church: so that by its grandure one might presume it to have been an Arch-Temple of the Druids.

It is situated in the countrey of the stones called the Grey-weather: of which ‡ 14 or 15 miles from the Grey weathers. sort of stones, both this Antiquity, and that of Stoneheng‡ were built. From the south entrance (see Plan II.) runnes a solenne Walke, sc. of stones pitch'd on end about seven foot high, more or less, w^{ch} goes as far as Kynet, which is at least a measured mile from Aubury,§ and from Kynet it turnes with a right angle eastward crossing the river,¹ and ascends up the hill to another monument of the same kind, but less.² The distance of the stones in this walk, and the breadth of it, is much about the distance of a noble walke of Trees of that length: and very probable this Walke was made for Processions.

² The short Avenue running from West Kennet eastward to the stone-circles on Seven Barrow (or Overton) Hill, as seen at the foot of the general Plan II., is also made in Aubrey's MS. the subject of a separate and larger drawing. That drawing, reduced one sixth, is inserted on the side of our Plate.

Mdm. the great stones at Aubury's towne's end, where this Walke begins, fell down in Autumn 1684, and broke in two, or three pieces: it stood but two foot deep in the earth. From Mr. Walter Sloper, of Mounckton, the next parish, Attorney: who also tells me that there is a perfect ridge-way from Zilbury Hill to Oldbury Castle. Below the ridge are five barrows: t'is in his way to Devizes.

Perhaps at this angular Turning, might be the Celle, or Convent, of the Priests belonging to these Temples: to be sure they did not dwell far from them: and their Habitations might haply be the occasion of the rise of this village, Kynet.

Within the circumference, or Borough of this Monument, is now the village of Aubury, which stands per crucem, as is to be seen by Scheme the 1st. The Houses are built of the Frustums of these huge stones, which they invade with great sledges: for here-about are no other stones to be found, except Flints: I have verbum Sacer- *dotis for it, that these mighty stones, as hard as marble, may be broken in what part of them you please, without any great trouble: sc. make a fire on that line of the stone, where you would have it crack; and after the stone is well heated, draw over a line with cold water, and immediately give a knock with a smyth's sledge, and it will break like the collets at the Glass-house.

The Church is likewise built of them: and the Mannour-house w^{ch} was built by the Dunches, temp. Reg. Elizabethæ: and also another faire House not far from that.

By reason of the crosse streetes, houses, gardens, orchards, and several small closes, and the fractures made in this Antiquity for the building of those Houses, it was no very easy taske for me to trace out the Vestigia and so to make this Survey. Wherefore I have dis-empestred [dis-entangled] the Scheme from the enclosures, and houses, &c.: w^{ch} are altogether foreigne to this Antiquity, and would but have clouded and darkned the reall Designe. The crosse street within this monument, was made in process of time for the convenience of the rodes.

One of the Monuments in the street, that runnes East and West, like that above Holy-head, is converted into a pigstye, or cow-house—as is to be seen in the roade.

I am enformed by Mr. Edw. Philips, that as one rides from Marleborough to Compton Bassett, a village not far from hence Westward, are to be seen Houses, part whereof are stones pitched on end, as big as those of Stonehenge.

As to the Etymologie of the word Aubury: it is vulgarly called Abury: and is writt

But in the legier-book of Malmesbury* Abbey it is writt Aubury; and so it is in the Records of y^e Tower. But here, methinkes, I see some Reader smile to himselfe, thinkinge how I have strained this Place to be of my own Name: not heeding that there is a letter's difference, which quite alters the signification of the words. For Aubery, Albrerit, is a Christen Name, as Godfrey or Rowland, &c., the l before a consonant is frequently turned into u by the Northern people. But begging pardon for this digression to obviate the scornfull † smile, I come back to the Etymologie. What bury, borough, signifies, every one knows: but I was at a great losse for the meaning of the first syllable, au, till Mr. Johannes Heysig,‡ a learned Suede, enformed me, that Hä^o signifies river, or flowing water, in the Swedish language. Au is not to be found in the Dutch or Saxon Dictionaries: but he affirms that Au is alwaies fluvius, and that eau in French comes from Au, or Aa^o; as also ea, as in Eaton, which is a name given to many waterish Townes, e.g. Eaton near Windsor, Water-Eaton in Oxfordshire, &c. So likewise ey and ay, as Ayton in the North, Chelsey, Chertsey, &c., so Breda, that is Broadwater.§ At this Towne's end, sc. Aubury, by the church, is a watery place, w^{ch}, I thinke, is the source of the River Kynnet.

But after all that hath been said, I have a conceit, that Aubury is a corruption of Albury, that is, Oldbury; or the Old Borough: changeing, as is aforesaid, before a consonant, l into u: and well agrees with the nature of this Old Place.

On the brow of the hill above Kynet, on the right hand of the high-way which goes from Bristow to Marleborough, is such a monument as [at the side of Plate II.] called.....The stones are fower and five feet high,.....in number; most of them, now, are fallen downe. I doe well remember there is a circular trench about this Monument or Temple, by the same token that Sir Robert Moray told me that one might be convinced and satisfied by it that the earth did growe.² Here re-

² Dr. Stukeley says (Abury p. 32) that "Mr. Aubrey erred upon this point, and that there was remains a kind of solemn walk from Kynet to the top of the hill where this monument is. It is at least a quarter of a mile in length,.....foot broad, and the stones distant one from another about.....foot. West Kynet stands in the angle where the walke from Aubury hither, and that from the top of the hill, did joine. It lies by the side of a little rivulet called Kynet, which runnes to Marleborough, from whence Cynetium hath its denomination: and 'tis likely that here might in the old time have been the celle or Convent for the priests belonging to these temples.¹

no ditch round these circles" on Overton or Seven-barrow hill. But as Aubrey "well remembered it," by the token of a particular remark made upon the spot by Sir Robert Moray, it is by no means clear that Aubrey did err. That there may have been no ditch in Stukeley's time is likely enough, for an interval of more than half a century had passed between their visits, and continual agriculture may easily have effaced the mark of a slight hollow on the surface, such as these "ditches" around barrows and circles frequently were.

Aubrey appears to have been the first person who ever paid the least attention to the now well-known Antiquities at this place: and this, under the circumstances described by him in the Text, he was accidentally led to do in 1648, being then in the 23rd year of his age. He afterwards visited it frequently; and the MS. of the "Monumenta Britannica" which contains his description bears the date of 1665. As no one followed him in the investigation until 1718, Aubrey's ground-plans are the earliest we have by 70 years. On this account alone they are curious and interesting; but they are more particularly so, because one of them (No .II.) appears to be altogether antagonistic to his successor Dr. Stukeley's notion of Abury, viz., that it was, what he was the first to call it, "a Serpent-Temple." Many persons have been incredulous about temples of this kind: and their incredulity will not be lessened by Aubrey's representation of the shape of this monument, taken so many years before.

Aubrey's own statement of the motive which led him to renew his researches at Abury is that he was "edged" to do so, by observing that certain antiquaries before and about his time had "not dealt fairly" with another great Wiltshire monument, Stonehenge: but had gone by the rule of framing the monument "according to their own hypothesis," which, as he truly adds, "is much differing from the thing itself." He had also often been misled by descriptions of Antiquities, having seen scarcely one which did not either fall short of fame or exceed it. He therefore determined in this case "to let the stones speak for themselves." His memoranda he made on the spot. "The delivery being faithful," he hopes that his style may be excused: and so, concludes by offering an opinion on the subject, "with humble submission to better judgment."

From this it is quite clear that he was under no bias whatsoever of fancy as to any particular shape that Abury might or might not have had in remote times: but that he drew on his paper with perfectly honest intention and as well as he had the means, or was in the habit, of drawing, that which he saw; and according to the form in which it appeared to him to be lying on the ground, then and there, before his eyes. The monument was very intricate. To make a mistake in copying it was far from impossible. But before any one ventures now to charge Aubrey with mistake, he had better consider how the charge is to be proved? The best witnesses of course would be the stones themselves: and in their absence, the cavities left by them. Unfortunately, both of stones and cavities, the first through wanton destruction, the second through the ordinary action of the plough, the greater part have disappeared. Still, Abury is not entirely destroyed. There is something left. If therefore we wish to know how far Aubrey is trustworthy as to what is gone, his plans should be tested, so far as they can, by what remains. To do this in detail would require more space than a note will allow: so to take one instance, the great Earthwork, Plan I.

With an eye accustomed to Wiltshire antiquities, Aubrey immediately noticed that it was an "ill-shaped monument," but, as it was not his business to improve the shape, he drew it as he found it: that is, so irregularly circular, that if any speculative Antiquary were disposed to say that there had been in patriarchal times "Hexagoniums" or "Pentagoniums," six or five-sided Temples, nothing would be easier than to claim Abury for one, either according to Aubrey's plan I., or Sir R. C. Hoare's xiii plate, in the second volume of his "Ancient Wiltshire."

Dr. Stukeley, on the other hand, in the large plate that forms the frontispiece to his work on Abury, represents it as a true geometrical circle. The Earthwork is fortunately left to speak for itself, and accordingly it is Sir R. C. Hoare's warning to his readers, that upon Stukeley's outline of the Earthwork "no dependence is to be placed." He even doubts "whether it were taken from actual survey:" whereas of Aubrey's plan he says that, "on comparing it with our's I find a great resemblance between them." (Sir Richard's was taken with care by Mr. Crocker, a Surveyor.) In this particular therefore, Aubrey by keeping to the fact, hit the character proper to the British antiquity. Stukeley misrepresents that character entirely. All the old Earthworks are irregular: not because the engineers who knew how to move stones of 40 tons, were ignorant how to describe a circle, but because for some reason of their own, the employers, who-soever they were, preferred the ruder to the more elegant geometry.

But it is in the plan No. II. which professes to give the whole structure of Abury, that the testimony of these two oldest witnesses comes into the most perplexing collision. Aubrey observed only one stone-avenue issuing from the Earthwork, viz., the one that led to Kennet. This appeared to him to run straight as far as that village. Stukeley, seventy years afterwards, asserts that there had been two stone-avenues, each a mile long, issuing from the Earthwork in different directions, the one towards Kennet, the other towards Beckhampton: together (to use his own words) "performing the graceful sinuosities of a serpent." Of the Kennet avenue, he says that on coming out of Abury it curved a little. Its course in that part cannot be identified with certainty, but it may have made a little deviation, to avoid going up a hill. Farther on, where its relics do begin, they indicate a perfectly straight line for nearly half a mile. Arrived at Kennet, according to Aubrey, it turned off at an angle. This he particularly mentions two or three times. Stukeley calls it a "mighty curve," but as he had, in the sentence before, mentioned that there had been a great demolition of stones at Kennet, he had scarcely so good an opportunity as Aubrey of knowing what the exact shape of the turn had been.

Of a stone-avenue leading from Abury to Beckhampton (which is the great point in dispute,) Aubrey says not one word. He mentions the three gigantic blocks of stone called by the people "The Devil's Coits," (now the Long-stones,) which lay on that side of Abury, and of which two are still left standing; but no others, great or small, standing upright, any where near them. If on that side of Abury there were any not upright, but lying about or half-buried in the ground, it is clear that they did not attract his eye as stones that had ever formed part of the general structure.

Stukeley's statement, on the other hand, is that coming out of the Earthwork on the road towards Beckhampton he saw stones, some lying in the very road, some in the pastures: and that he was told of others that had been broken up in the fields, all within a few years prior to 1722. Upon, what certainly must be called, very slender evidence, he created an avenue of 200 stones, running some way beyond Beckhampton, and ending in a point upon the open downs. The curious, with Stukeley's book in hand, have often gone to look for the Beckhampton avenue, or the marks of it, in vain: and none of the inhabitants are able to remember a stone of it. Stukeley claims for it one or two stones which he saw forming the foundation of a barn. There is one still to be seen in that situation, but it is not larger than a horse-block. On the open down beyond Beckhampton may be also seen here and there one or two points of grey-wether just emerging from the turf; but to all appearance they are occupying a place from which they never were disturbed. The surface thereabout shows no hollows or scars of stones removed; though of such marks of injury the downs are generally long retentive.

The narrowing of the latter part of this supposed avenue, and its ending in a point, are admitted by Stukeley himself to be only a supposition. He says, "This I infer from the manner of the end of a temple at Classerness" (or Callernish in the island of Lewis in the Hebrides), "which I take to be the tail of a snake." In another part of his work (p. 62), he brings the Classerness monument forward again as his other instance of a serpentine temple; and blames Mr. Lhuyd "as a bad designer for calling it an avenue, and for not discerning the curve of it no more than that of Kennet avenue, which he has likewise drawn in a straight line." No wonder Mr. Lhuyd was unable to discern a curve towards the end of Classerness, for the stones in that part stand in perfectly rectilinear order: and the whole monument bears no nearer resemblance to a serpent than a Latin cross does. [See the figure, "Borlase's Cornwall," ii. 206.] Stukeley's supposition, therefore, of a curve, a narrowing, or a point, at Beckhampton, so far as anything of the kind could be inferred from any tail of a snake in the Hebrides, was quite groundless.

The end of the Beckhampton avenue being fanciful, it is not impossible that the same fancy may also have been at work in constructing other parts of it.

From Stukeley's own statement it appears that the greater part of the stones seen by him lay at the beginning, in the interval between the Earthwork and the "Devil's Coits." In the next interval, between the said "Coits" and Beckhampton, his alleged track becomes very vague, and depends chiefly on what he was told. He speaks of a stone lying almost buried in the ground, of others broken up, and pieces lying dispersedly about on banks and meres. Now considering that in the lands about Abury greywether stones lay in his day, as he elsewhere tells us, as thick as leaves, (as they still do on the Hackpen side of the village,) it must have required a much greater precision of memory, than is usually found in labouring men, to be able to identify the very exact situation, within a yard or two, of any stone which, in a country full of stones, they had broken up out of the way of their ploughshare, across half a mile of heath, or open ground, during twenty years or more last past. It is impossible to believe that they could have settled that so nicely, without a few hints from the idea that was working in the Doctor's brain.

But where had been Aubrey's eyes all the while, seventy years before? If these stones had stood in avenue order, and that order had only been destroyed within twenty years, or within memory before 1722, it ought to have been visible, indeed much more distinct, so far back as 1648 when he was exploring Abury. Such order, if it existed, would have been the very first object on the open heath to greet him as he rode towards Abury from his home near Chippenham. Yet from his plan and description which make not the slightest allusion to it, it seems that though he went, and very often, for the express purpose of looking for these things, and was riding about the ground year after year, never did he see the Beckhampton avenue.

Perhaps the case may have been thus. There may have been in ancient times, a walk between stones from the Earthwork as far as the "Devil's Coits," connecting that outstanding monument with the main body. That interval was more shut in by hedges and enclosures in Aubrey's time than the rest; and the stones if few and not very remarkable in size, may have escaped his eye, or have been looked upon merely as greywethers in situ. More than this it seems difficult to allow. If an avenue, or the remains of one, crossing the open country near Beckhampton, is insisted on, it leaves us in a dilemma between Aubrey blind or Stukeley fanciful.

Without referring to the general reputation of the two men, but judging between them merely by their respective memoirs of this monument, it is less easy to charge Aubrey with seeing too little than Stukeley with a propensity to see too much. Aubrey seems to have noticed every thing else at Abury, except this alleged avenue: describes what he saw, simply, and so far as can be tested, faithfully: while Stukeley's folio volume not only makes the monument more elaborately regular in its shape than it was, or from its antiquity was likely to have been, but loads the subject with so many extravagant and far fetched interpretations that the reader is often at a loss to know, where he is following a true light, and where an ignis fatuus.

One licence in that volume Stukeley certainly took, not usual with antiquaries claiming to be trustworthy. Having formed—as he had a perfect right to do—his own notion of the original shape of Abury, viz., that of a snake passing through a circle, he gave it a popular currency by stamping it with a name, of, he distinctly says, historical authority. Several times in the course of his book he repeats the assertion, "That this figure was a Form of Temple in use in the very oldest, the patriarchal, times: and that the first learned nations gave it the name of a Dracontium."

It ought to be known that he omitted to bequeath the information in whose history of what learned nation he met with the word "Dracontium." The same statement continues, strange to say, to be made by his followers, but neither they nor any one else have ever been able to produce the name. The truth must therefore be spoken. In the sense of a temple, serpentine or otherwise, the word "Dracontium" is utterly unknown to lexicons. The name being spurious, suspicion is awakened, and those who have been long imposed upon by it, are now beginning to doubt whether the thing is genuine.

Of serpents and circles, not only in this, but in a great many other combinations, as emblems of certain attributes of a beneficent Deity, there are abundant examples in Egypt. But they are only small devices carved upon the face of temples; which, as Aubrey would say, is "much differing" from temples built in that shape. Of this there is not known to have been any example in Egypt, nor is there the slightest allusion to any thing like it, among the ancient traditions gleaned by Herodotus from the priests of that country. Walks, sometimes straight, sometimes but very rarely, winding, from one part of a sacred precinct to another, have been found: but, that the latter particularly allude to a serpent, seems to be at present founded more upon conjecture than authentic information. The relics themselves in their present imperfect state accord but very feebly with such a design. There is generally some essential portion wholly wanting. Both at Abury and Stanton Drew, whilst one avenue in each case remained tolerably distinct, the second has long since unaccountably disappeared. The three or four instances hitherto produced in aid of the "Dracontian" theory are not what one would expect, for one is as straight as an arrow: and others, even the most promising, bend sharply. Dr. Stukeley seems to have left it to posterity to find the examples: "he had no doubt that many would be found in Britain:" but they do not appear to have dropped in so rapidly as he predicted. If there is any part of Britain likely to produce them, it is Dartmoor, and Cornwall: but the report from those districts is not very encouraging. On Dartmoor there are stone rows and avenues in plenty. Mr. Rowe however in his work on that district says that among the whole number there is only one slightly curvilinear, and though he is not unwilling to befriend the "Dracontians," even that one he is unable to grant them. Of Stukeley's fantastic assortment of temples into "round, serpentine, and winged," Dr. Borlase the historian of Cornwall, conversant with all its ancient remains, quietly says, "The first sort (round) are very numerous, but of the others, I have not met with any."

The only work to be instantly recognized as having been intended for the figure of a serpent is, in the New World. In Messrs. Squier and Davis's curious volume of "Ancient Monuments in the Mississippi Valley," p. 96, is a Plate of a narrow curved promontory in Adams County, Ohio; on the surface of which has been formed a low earthen bank about 230 yards long, fairly resembling the coils of that reptile. The same region abounds with similar low embankments, made to resemble quadrupeds, birds, the human figure, &c.

With respect to the meaning of the name of Abury; it will be observed that at the Heading of Aubrey's two Plans, he had at first written Atebury, but afterwards, considering that form to be used only by "ignorant scribes" as he called them, he had with his pen, altered it into Aubury; believing the name to be a corruption of Auld, i.e. Oldbury. It may have been so; but the Editor is not aware of any instances in ancient documents in which the spelling is near enough to Auld, to support that derivation. In Domesday Book it is Arreberie: but as the v in that Record is indiscriminately used for v or u, this settles nothing. In the Hundred Roll of 3 Edw. I. [1274] it is Aveneburi, Avenesburi, or Avebury: and in the same book, persons apparently of this parish are described as, of Anebury or Enesburi. In Herefordshire there is a village now called Avenbury, which in Domesday Book is written Avenesbury. These pronunciations seem to indicate a derivation from Aren, (or, softening the v,) Auen, or Aun. This could scarcely be from Avon, water, for the rivers Avon are at some distance, and a small brook said to be so called, is two or three miles off. On the spot itself, there is only a winter-brook, which does not bear that name.

There have been several desperate efforts to find a meaning for Abury, such as "Abiri" from the Samothracian Cabiri; and, "Ab" a serpent, and "Aur" the sun: but with so many monuments in Wiltshire whose names end in "bury," it seems quite unreasonable to sever this particular one from the rest. Of "bury," we may be nearly certain. The difficulty is with the first syllable.

Merely as a suggestion, and nothing more, it may just be mentioned that in Ezekiel xxx. 17. the word Aven or Auen occurs as the name of a place. "The young men of Aven and of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity." In the Greek of the Septuagint, Aven is here rendered by Heliopolis, the "City of the Sun." This was near Cairo in Egypt and was the chief seat of that kind of worship, visited by Herodotus (II., 59 and 63). In Genesis xli. 45, "The Priest of On" (which is the same word as Aven, Auen or Aun, a long vowel o being used) is also explained to mean the Priest of Heliopolis. In Amos i. 5, "The plain of Aven" in Syria is by some considered to be Baal-bee, also a city of the Sun. Of the names Beth-aren and Beth-aun, (house of vanity or idols,) Calmet says, "It may however be queried whether in these names Aven or Aun is not the Aun or On, (the Sun) of Egypt."

How, it may be asked, could the name have been brought into Britain? Oriental names of places connected with religion, have sometimes found their way to the West. Carnac, a name in Upper Egypt, is also the name of a place on the desert coast of Britany in France, remarkable for an extraordinary assemblage of rude blocks of stone stretching several miles into the country. The worship of the Sun was common in these islands. It came from the East: his name of Baal is traceable in many Irish names. In Britany, near Aurai, there is a large monument of stones called Lech-aren, certainly not a French name: Lech is an old British word for stone, as in crom-lech (bowing stone.) Our remote predecessors may have imported the name of Aun with the worship. Even in our own day various Christian Societies continue to borrow, from the East (whence our own Religion was derived,) such names for places of worship, as Sion, Ephraim, Bethesda, Eben-ezer, Zoar, &c. The form of the great earthwork at Abury and of the rings of stones within it, are generally considered to have some reference to the Sun. Structures connected with that worship seem to have been occasionally of great size, even when architecture was more advanced. Strabo mentions a temple of Apollo, constructed by the Milesians, so spacious that it was left roofless, and contained within its precincts the houses of a village, and a grove, besides minor sacred edifices. [Edit. 1707, Vol. II., p. 941]. In some of these particulars, this might be a description of Abury.

It may, however, be doubted whether an Oriental word would be combined with a Saxon word, to form such a name as Aun-bury. As a general rule, both parts of a local name ought to belong to one and the same language. But where one part is a Proper name, either of some Deity, Person, or Place, in such cases perhaps the combination with another common word may be admissible: as for instance Mount Sion, Mars Hill, &c. Aun-bury is not more incongruous than Sil-bury, if the latter is derived, as some think, from the British Sul, or Latin Sol, the Sun.

But in presenting to the reader the above morsel of speculative etymology, the writer begs to explain that he does not placard it as the derivation of the name of Abury. It is merely a passing shot, probably of no effect, at the origin of an ancient monument so strong in its obscurity as to mock all the efforts of regular approach. The spelling of "Abury" has been adopted in this volume, partly for the sake of uniformity with the "Ancient Wiltshire" of Sir R. C. Hoare, partly because it is at present impossible to say what other form is more correct.

Taking the map of Europe generally, these aggregations of mighty stones appear to be chiefly found upon the coasts and islands that form its Western fringe: more especially in Britain, continental or insular. The actual spots are (speaking also generally) the wildest and most desolate: open plains or what formerly were so. Such situations not having been, so far as appears, much in vogue with the Druids, it was probably from not knowing what else to call them, that these monuments have been called Druidical. This is the term which Aubrey uses, but it does not seem to have been his first idea. The sheet of paper, on which his Plan No. I. is drawn in the Original MS., had been previously used by him, on the reverse side, in preparing his remarks: and, from one of the sentences, afterwards condemned by an erasure with his pen, it appears that his first intention had been "to endeavour to prove that all these stone monuments had been Burying-places."

The use to which any structure is applicable must be one of three: viz., Military, Civil, or Religious. To the first, Abury was utterly unsuited; the great ditch being on the inner side of the vallum or earthwork. If it had been for defence, the ditch would have been outside; like the moat below a castle-wall. For Civil purposes, such as large gatherings of people, musters, public games, and the like, the open plains around Abury would be convenient enough, but as to the area itself, occupied by large circles of stupendous blocks of stone, it seems almost impossible to think of any other use to which it could have been appropriated than such as, in some way or other, was connected with Religion. Sir Walter Scott visited, and in his Diary described the great Circles of Stones at Stennis in the Orkneys. Within view of them at some distance, he mentions a large tumulus (like Silbury near Abury), with other smaller ones nearer. He attributed to those antiquities a Scandinavian origin, and refers to the "Eyrbyggja Saga" for repeated meetings at such places whether for Civil or Religious purposes, such as offering sacrifices to Thor and Woden. [Lockhart's Mem. of Life of Sir W. S., ch. xxix]. Bucks' horns, oyster shells, and other signs of festivity, (not altogether confined to primitive times,) were found in the original soil beneath the great Earthwork, when part of it was cleared away many years ago on the Eastern side of the Church. [See Plan I]. But if Woden and Thor came in only with the Anglo-Saxons, Abury (unless a feature of the place deceives us) seems to have been in existence long before their time, and also before the Romans. For a road (called in Plan II., "Rode from Marlborough to Bristol,") said to have been used by the Romans, passed directly across the avenue near Kennet.

A public road would scarcely have been allowed to do so, whilst the precincts were sacred. It may therefore be inferred that Abury had already ceased to be regarded as sacred when that road was made. The avenue is not likely to have been made after the road, unless the Priests were content to have their ceremonies and processions (if it was used for such purposes) interrupted by a general thoroughfare.

But when, by whom, and for what purposes soever Abury was originally made and used, nothing whatever is known about it, until in Domesday Book we find "Avreberie" registered as in the hands of the Crown, "Terra Regis," King's land. The only part at that time in cultivation, consisted of Two Hides of land held under the Crown by Rainbold, a Priest who also had the Church. This seems to have included the whole Rectorial estate, land, church, chapels, tithes and customs: for in the reign of King Henry III. (1217—1270) these, together with the right of presentation to the Vicarage, were granted by the Crown to the Abbot and Monks of Cirencester. The grant was confirmed in 1336 by King Edw. III. (Hundred Rolls), and this part of the parish continued to belong to Cirencester Abbey till the reign of Henry VIII. In 1553, one year before its own dissolution, that Abbey granted a lease of this property for sixty years to Thomas Truslowe, Jane his wife, and John their son, at a rent of £36 16s. per annum, and a Crown-rent of £3 5s. The Truslowes were of Yorkshire origin. In the Wilts Visitation of 1623 there is a Pedigree of them, and there are some epitaphs in the Church. In 1604, probably on the termination of Truslowe's lease, the Rectory estate was granted by the Crown in fee-farm to Mrs. Mary Dunch. [State Papers]. The lands called Abury-Truslowe are now the property of George Brown Esq. The Vicarage is in the gift of the Crown. It was united to Winterbourne Monkton in 1747. The Crown Rent above-mentioned was purchased on 2nd July 1558 by William Allen of Calne.

THE PRIORY. Another portion of Abury, after being for a time in the hands of a subject, had reverted to the Crown in the reign of Hen. III., who bestowed it upon William de Tankerville, Chamberlain of Normandy. With it the Chamberlain endowed the foreign Benedictine Monastery of St. George de Baskeville or Boschaville in Normandy. That Fraternity was represented here by a subordinate House, the Superior of which was called the "Prior of Avenebury." Robert of Avesbury, probably an ecclesiastic from this Priory, and Registrar of Canterbury, wrote a History of King Edw. III. (MS. Harl. No. 200), printed at Oxon. in 1720, and edited by T. Hearne. No Register or Cartulary of the Priory is known. Being Alien it was liable to confiscation. In 1296 it was in danger, but William the Prior had protection. [Prynne, III., 707]. On a suppression of Alien Houses in the reign of Rich. II., this Priory Manor was given (according to Tanner) to the College of St. Mary, Winchester. How it came back to the Crown does not appear, but in Hen. IV. it was granted to the Duke of York towards his Foundation of Fotheringhay College. Immediately before the Dissolution, on surrendering its estate here to Hen. VIII., Fotheringhay College was allowed to receive in exchange Hemingford-Abbot, co. Huntingdon (1545). This property was then sold by the Crown to Sir William Sherington, purchaser of Lacock Nunnery. All Sir William's lands were taken from him (as mentioned above, p. 91) for defrauding the Mint, but he was afterwards allowed to redeem them at the original price. It is doubtful whether he recovered the Priory, for in 1555—6 (2 and 3 Philip and Mary) the Crown granted it to William Dunch of Wittenham, co. Berks, Auditor of the Mint. [Jones's Index]. He died 1577, giving it to his younger son Walter, who died 1594, leaving it to his younger son William. [Noble's House of Cromwell]. The initials and date now over the House are "I. M. D., 1602." Kingsmill Long's translation of "Barclay's Argenis" is dedicated to the "truly noble Wm. Dunche of A., Esq., 1636." From the Dunch family the Priory passed by sale to the Stawels, of Somerton, co. Somerset. In 1639 Ralph Stawel Esq. (created Baron in 1683) was the largest proprietor in Abury Parish. The next largest were Margaret Dunch widow, Dame Mary Baynton, widow, and Mary Norborne, widow. [Subsidy Roll]. Mr. Stawel's house is mentioned by Aubrey in Natural History of Wilts, p. 42. Sir Richard Holford, Master in Chancery 1694, was lord of the manor at his death, 1718. Of his family, there are burials to 1751. (Heneage, Lord Winchelsea, associated with Stukeley in his researches, has been sometimes mentioned as an owner at Abury at this period, but this does not appear to have been the case. He was probably an owner at Woodlands in Mildenhall, which see.) The next owner was Mr. Jones, and then Governor Williamson of Jamaica, who bequeathed it to his relatives, the same family of Jones, now owners. The Priory House is now occupied by Mr. Kemm.

(The first paragraph is from the "Monumenta Britannica.")

In Pettis's Life of Sir Stephen Fox (founder of the Holland and Ilchester Families,) it is stated that Sir Stephen's Will speaks of his elder brother John Fox having some estate at Abury: (probably Winterborne). Some lands here belonging to a chantry-chapel in Bromham church were sold by the Crown in 1563, to John, Philip, and Christopher Shewter.

A Church was built at Abury before the Conquest, as it is mentioned in Domesday Book. The present one (St. James's) stands outside the ancient earthwork. The font and porch are of Norman date. The former is engraved in "Paley's Fonts." Over the chancel arch is the front of the old Roodloft, gilt and painted. It is drawn in a recent publication by the "Ilam Anastatic Society," No. 1. In Waylen's Marlborough, p. 436, is an account of a curious action at law depending on the legibility of two tombstones in the church-yard. The Registers commence 1698, but there are portions of older ones.

BECKHAMPTON (anciently Backhampton) and Stanmore in this parish belonged in William I. to Gilbert de Breteville, but in Edw. I. were held under Isabella de Fortibus Countess of L'isle, in moieties: one by the Moignes of Maddington, by whose heiress it passed to Lord Stourton: the other by Casterton, succeeded by Colville. Mr. Holford of Weston Birt is now a proprietor here.

There was a Free Chapel at Backhampton, dedicated to St. Vincent. [Sarum Registers, A.D. 1532]. The Chaplain was instituted by the Bishop. We have the names of fifteen Chaplains, from 1302—1544: the last being John Waryner S. T. P. The patronage appears to have been alternately in the owners of the moieties above-mentioned. It paid 8s. to Malmesbury Abbey and 2s. to the Vicar of Abury, per annum. In Edw. VI. the chapel and tithes were leased to William Wellet and granted to — Southcote. Robert House (Hussey?) had them in 1570. William Dunch, 1624.

I am sorry that I did not take the circumference of the bottom and top and length of the hill: but I neglected it, because Sir Jonas Moore, Surveyor of the Ordnance, had measured it accurately, and also took the solid content, which he promised to give me; but upon his death, that, among many excellent papers, was lost ... No History gives us any account of it: the tradition only is, that King SIL, or ZEL as the country folke pronounce, was buried here on horseback, and that the hill was rased whilst a posset of milk was seething. The name of this hill, as also of Silchester, makes me suspect it to be a Roman name, sc. Silius. A hill like Silbury is described by Rudbeck in his Atlantica, Tab. 3, fig. 3.

Perhaps t'is quasi "Sili burgus:" so, "Moles Adriani" at Rome where the Emperor Adrian's dust lies, which is now made the Keepe of the Castle of St. Angelo.

It lies close to the London and Bath road, about half a mile west of West Kennet, and about a mile nearly due South of Abury. It is—"collis conspectæ magnitudinis"—a colossal conical mound, flat at the top, composed of chalk, and clothed with short turf. The dimensions have been very variously given. Sir R. C. Hoare states the circumference, as near the base as possible, to be 2027 feet, the diameter at top 120 feet, the sloping height 316 feet, the perpendicular height 170 feet, and the space covered by the mound 5 acres and 34 perches of ground. These measures, without being warranted accurate, may serve to give an approximate notion of the size. In forming this mound, part of the labour was saved by Nature. From high ground lying East and West (along which the Bath road runs), a spur or small side-ridge jutted out Northwards. The end of this was taken for the basis, and the intervening soil was cut out and thrown upon it. The late Mr. Rickman's illustration is that a  was made into an . A small isthmus or neck was left, to serve as approach and to shorten the ascent. The earth was perhaps taken up in baskets by a spiral path.

Whether Silbury had any thing to do with Abury or was raised for some independent purpose, and if the latter, for what purpose, is a question that still waits to be answered. Towards ascertaining its supposed Sepulchral character three partial openings contribute the following results.

1. In 1723 some workmen planting trees at the top for Mr. Holford then the owner, dug up very little below the surface a skeleton; which Dr. Stukeley then living supposed to be the remains of the "Great King" to whom the mound was conjectured to have been erected. But Sir R. C. Hoare assures us, on his experience of British tumuli, that the place for a primary interment is not at the top, but at the bottom, on or immediately under the original native soil. Stukeley adds that from this digging he obtained a horse's bit, of iron, but a mass of rust, (of which he gives an engraving in his "Abury," Pl. xxxvi.): also some deer's horns and an iron knife with a bone handle, all much decayed. As he was not present at the finding of these articles, it is neither impossible nor improbable that he may have been imposed upon.

2. The second opening of Silbury was in November 1776, under the direction of the Duke of Northumberland and Colonel Drax. This was by a downward shaft from the top. Bingley's London Journal of that date says that the hill "was begun to be opened by the miners of Mendip on Thursday last. They have made a hole at the top, of eight feet square. The antiquaries promise themselves wonders from the bowels of this mountain, (and it may produce a—Mouse.)" According to the recollections of two old men, Maskelyn and Blake, still living in 1849 (who however seem to have recollected rather what they had heard, than what they had actually seen) the mountain had produced—not the predicted mouse, but—"a Man," i.e. a skeleton: found at the bottom of the shaft. A thin slip of oak-wood, met with in that situation, was all that Colonel Drax shewed to Douglas: [Nenia Britan: 1793, p. 161.]

3. The latest examination was in 1849, by the Archæological Institute, Mr. Blandford being the engineer. Of this a detailed account, written by the late Very Rev. J. Merewether, Dean of Hereford, is printed in the Salisbury volume of the Institute, p. 73. The operation was not conducted from the top, but by a tunnel in the side, so as to strike the line of the original surface, on which, (as above-mentioned,) the upper or artificial portion of the hill had been heaped, and on or about which any primary interment was thought most likely to be found. It was ascertained that the shaft sunk in 1776 had neither hit the exact centre nor reached the original soil. The alleged discovery, of "the Man," was accordingly pronounced to be very doubtful. No skeleton or sepulchre was found in 1849, but several Sarsen stones, some fragments of bones of ox and red-deer, and, in two instances the tine of an antler: all of which articles, especially the first, are of British sepulchral character. The Dean thought that the verge of the base of the mound had been set round with Sarsen stones; but the evidence of this is considered quite insufficient by Mr. W. Long. [See "Wilts Archæol. Mag." IV. 339.] As the greater part of the interior has never yet been examined, the result is not considered by many archæologists to be quite conclusive.

Mr. William Owen, author of the Welsh Dictionary, identified Abury as the "Gorsedd Bryn Gwyddon," one of the "primary circles of Britain," and Silbury, as "Cludair Cyvranon" or "Heap of assemblies," the piling up of which is mentioned in the fourteenth Triad.

Among those who have taken an anti-sepulchral view of the question, was the late Rev. W. L. Bowles, who was very earnest for a Hill-Temple to Mercury. [History of Bremhill, chap. ii.: and Gent. Mag., 1827, part ii.] The Rev. J. Bathurst Deane connects it with Abury, dedicates it to the Sun, and supposes a perpetual fire to have been kept burning at the summit. In the late Rev. E. Duke's "Planetarium" of the Wiltshire Downs, Silbury represents the Earth. Another opinion is that, like the Mount at Marlborough, it was the basis of a Keep or Fort. [See Quarterly Review, Vol. xci, p. 312]. Leland seems to have taken it for one: "Tumulus terræ, in usus bellicos, olim egestæ, cui nomen Selburgus." [Itin. ix. 91]. Mounds again of this sort may have been thrown up sometimes, as at Waterloo, in memory of a victory. There is none on record. In

"John de Tybetot had one Knight's Fee in Broadhinton, co. Wiltes; which Fidenas Wase holds at £6 13s. 4d. And one, in Over-Worston (Over-Wroughton) in Wilts, which the Abbot of Tewkesbury holds at £10." From Harl. MSS.

A.D. 1006 there was a fight with the Danes at Cynet, or near the Kennet, but that was a defeat of the British. Dr. Stukeley, regarding Silbury as the tumulus of some British King, thought it "likely" that, just as in Egypt, upon the breast of a mummy was sometimes placed the hieroglyphic of a circle and a snake, so the earthwork and stone rows of Abury (to which he was pleased to give that form) had been constructed "to brood over the depositum of the prince interred; hence, the temple of Abury was made for the sake of Silbury." [Abury, p. 41 and 52]. Of this explanation (and perhaps not of this alone), it may be said, (to use one of Dr. Borlase's expressions), "T'is very unlikely—to say no more o'nt." Sir R. C. Hoare (Ancient Wilts, II., 89) believing Silbury to have been formed before the Roman occupation of Britain, observes that the Roman road coming from Bath "seems to have taken Silbury for its bearing, but to have made a slight deviation from the straight line to avoid it." This is certainly not very perceptible: and Mr. Rickman (Archæologia, xxviii, 402), denies it. Further, he maintains that the road was made before Silbury: and that, the road having been made by the Romans, Silbury is post Roman. He argues that, if Silbury existed first, then, the excavation, used in making Silbury, must have been on the spot when the engineer came to make the road: and if that were so, the engineer would surely have availed himself of that excavation, to carry his road through it, instead of over the hill alongside of it. This satisfied Mr. Rickman that the hollow, and consequently Silbury, was not in existence when the road was made. But he presumes the road to have been made by the Romans: of which there is no proof. There is in short, nothing at present to determine the origin of this Mound. "Factum abiit, monumenta manent."

There appear to have been two chief estates at Hentone, or Hantone, at the Conquest. 1. The Fee of Humphrey de Insulâ, afterward Tibetot's and Dunstanville's, of their Barony of Castle Combe. 2. Gilbert de Breteville's; who also had Cliff, and Back-hampton.

I. That part of the parish which is in Selkley Hundred, was held of the Castle Combe Barony by the Wase family (see "Blountesdon") in 1392: afterwards by Wm. Wrofton, Worston, or Wroughton, by whose descendants it was held for about 200 years. The house was built by Sir William Wroughton in A.D. 1540. [For their Pedigree see Wilts Visit. 1565 and 1623.] About A.D. 1640 the estate was bought from Sir Giles Wroughton by Sir John Glanville (second son of John Glanville, Judge of C.P.), a very celebrated Sergeant-at-Law, and Speaker of the House of Commons. [See Chalmer's Biog. Dict.] The purchase is mentioned in his epitaph, added to Aubrey's Text. He is said (but quære) to have buried Broad Hinton House, in order to prevent its being garrisoned by the Parliament. John Evelyn visited here. [Diary, 1654.]

Mr. Bernard Burke in his "Romantic Records of distinguished Families" (vol. i. p. 1) has worked up a story of "The Glanvilles," the facts of which he states to have been "gleaned with much labour and almost grain by grain," but his authorities are not given. The outline of it is, that Sir John Glanville, the Judge, disinherited Francis his eldest son for his wildness, and gave certain estates to his younger son John the Serjeant: that a Mr. William Crymes of Killworthy near Tavistock, having been saved from assassins by Francis in the streets of London interceded for him with Sir John the father on his death bed, but too late: that Francis afterwards adopting a steady life and following with diligence the study of the Law, married Elizabeth Crymes the daughter: that John Glanville upon hearing of this event and being satisfied of his brother's entire reformation invited him to dinner, placed him at the head of his table and desired him to raise the cover of the dish before him. Its contents, though dry, were not unsavoury to Francis; being a bundle of parchments, by which the estates were transferred to himself. There are some monuments of the Glanville family at Tavistock, co. Devon.

A correspondent of the Devizes Gazette, March, 1858, who claims to speak upon authority, states that "The descendants of Sir John Glanville became reduced, and in the early part of the 17th century sold the estate to Thomas Benett Esq.": [A Subsidy Roll of A.D. 1639-40 gives the names of William, Julius, and the Lady Glanville, as separate contributors at Broad-Hinton in that year.] "From Mr. Benett this estate, as well as that of the Norbornes, and also the Salthrop estate, passed to his daughter, Mrs. Pye Benett, formerly of Salthrop. On her death the estates passed to her daughter Mrs. Calley, the wife of Thomas Calley Esq. of Burderop, and on her death to her son, the late John James Calley Esq. He sold them to John Parkinson Esq., of Lincoln's-inn-fields, who, however—as it turned out upon his death, a few years ago—purchased, and held them as trustee, for the great Duke of Wellington." The Broad-Hinton and Salthrop estates have been since bought (about 1860) from the second Duke of Wellington by Anthony M. S. Maskelyne Esq. of Basset's Down.

A small portion of Wroughton's lands was bought, 31 Eliz. by George Sadler.

II. The part of the parish which lies in Kingsbridge Hundred was held by Breteville at the Conquest: afterwards the Fee of Bigod the Earl Marshal: under which (like Cliff) it was possessed in Edw. I. by the Columbars family: and in 1316 by the Lords Cobham. This includes Ufcote: which afterwards belonged to the Lovells of Titchmarsh, (see Wanborough.) On the attainder of Francis, last Viscount Lovell, in 1485, Ufcote was granted to William Compton ancestor of Lord Northampton, by whose family it was sold with Elcombe, Wicklescote, &c., to Thomas Sutton, Founder of the Charter House, London.

A Sir Thomas Hinton of Broad-Hinton who married Elizabeth Gawen of Imber is mentioned by Sir R. C. Hoare (Heytesbury, p. 163). Cotmarsh maintains the Duchess of Somerset's General Charity.

BROAD TOWN lies both in Cliff Pipard and Broad Hinton parishes. In 7 John, Alan Basset (from whom Basset Down takes its name) was owner here: and was succeeded by the Despensers (see Compton Basset) who held under the honour of Wallingford. In 1398 Robert Bernard and Richard Parys (of Parys-place) held under Roger Mortimer, Earl of March. In Hen. VI. the proprietors in chief were the Earls of Warwick, and in 18 Edw. IV., George Duke of Clarence in right of his wife, their heiress. Doynell 1349, Nicholas Wootton 1453, and William York

On the South side, on the wall, are the figures aforesaid, a large monument of freestone with pillars, without any inscription, but with these Arms: [No. 445.] WROUGHTON, as before, quartering 1. (NORREYS).² 2. 3 bends within a 1476, are also old names here. The manor of Broad Town was left by Will of the Duchess of Somerset to maintain Froxfield Hospital.

The Rectory of Broad Hinton belongs to St. Nicholas Hospital Sarum: the Master of which presents to the Vicarage. The first presentation under this patronage appears to have been A.D. 1478.

On the marriage of the heiress of that family with John Norreys of Bray, co. Berks., temp. Edw. III., he assumed his wife's Arms. Anne, daughter of Sir Wm. Norreys, married William, grandfather of Sir Thomas Wroughton. [See "Wilts Visit." A.D. 1565, in Harl. MS., No. 1565, p. 31^b.]

In the N. wall of the Chancell is a statue of alabaster, and about the nich of this monument is a tedious Latin Inscription: but this is the substance of it.

“Erected to the memory of Francis Glanville, eldest sonne of the Serjeant, who was a Lieutenant-Colonel in the service of King Charles the First, obiit xxi day July, Ætat. 28, 1645, at the siege of Bridgwater, in Com. Somerset.”

In the North side of this Church, in a windowe, is an old scutcheon [No. 447].

¹ This quartering ought to be, Bendy of six, Azure and Or, a bordure Gules; for Merbroke of Yattendon, Berks; a family whose heiress Alicia had married Sir John Norreys.

² This is perhaps the Chenete of Domesday Book, held at that time “by the Church of St. Mary of Winchester, of Hugo, in trust for his daughter.” In the reign of King John a marsh and virgate of land belonged to the Prior and Canons of St. Margaret's, Marlborough. In 1315-16 John de Berwick and Godfrey de Weston were lords of the manor: probably Religious Men: as in 1383 (7 Rich. II.) the Manor and Tithes belonged to the Prior and Canons aforesaid. Some land charged “with the maintenance of a lamp” in the church was granted to — Dismars, (Edw. VI.); the Manor to the Earl of Pembroke, and Rectory to — Herbert, (Phil. and Mary). Richard Frankland Sen. had a grant (4 Eliz.) In 1639 Thomas Grubb Esq. and Dame Mary Baynton widow, were the largest contributors on the Subsidy Roll. In 1783 Sir Berkeley William Guise, Bart., died owner of the Manor and Tithes: which in 1786 belonged to Dr. Shute Barrington (then Bishop of Sarum) in right of his second wife Jane Guise, only sister to that Baronet. Stukeley, 1743, mentions Charles Tucker Esq. late of East Kennet.

MILDEN-HALL.²

Stands by the river Cunet, now Kinnet, about half a mile from Marleborough.

¹ Cunetio was a Station on the Roman road from Bath to London. Sir R. C. Hoare investigated the subject, and suggested the name of Upper Cunetio for Folly Farm on the hill near Marlborough: and that of Lower Cunetio for Mildenhall, (Ancient Wilts, ii. 91.)

The church was given by Will. I. to Osmund, Bishop of Old Sarum. Mr. Waylen's "History of Marlborough and its neighbourhood," published 1854, will supply information about this parish. In the Wilts Archæol. Mag., vol. VII. p. 1, is a Paper by the late Mr. F. A. Carrington, on its Ancient State. Of local objects of curiosity there is a list in the same work, vol. VI. p. 259.

Jeffery Daniel of St. Margaret's is named in Aubrey's Preface as one of his expected coadjutors in Wilts County History. Some of this family were Stewards at Marlborough to the Earl of Pembroke. In Preshute Church were lately some hatchments: and, on the North wall, the Arms with many quarterings of Wiliam Daniel of Preshute and his wife Cicely Ernley.

² The Manor of Mildenhall, (provincially called Middenhall, or "Minall") belonged in the reign of the Confessor to Glastonbury Abbey, and so continued till Edw. I. when it came to the hands of Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, under whom it was held by William de Ferrars, seventh Earl of Derby. By marriage of Isabel coheir of Ferrars, and widow of Gilbert Basset, it came to Reginald de Mohun, Lord of Dunster, co. Somerset. She was his second wife, and the Manor was given to their son William Mohun. He died without sons, and it went to his daughter and coheir Mary, wife of Sir John de Meryet. Afterwards (25 Edw. I.) it reverted to the elder house of Mohun. In Edw. III. it belonged to Bartholomew Lord Burghersh, who in 1371 sold it to Sir Thomas Hungerford, the purchaser of Farley Castle. In 1460 on the confiscation of the estates of that family it was granted for a short time to Richard, Duke of Gloucester, and then restored. On a second confiscation in 1540 the Crown granted it the Earl of Pembroke. The Hungerfords again recovered it. In 1613 it was held for life by the Earl of Rutland in right of his wife, widow of Sir Edward Hungerford. The Hungerfords finally ceased to be owners in 1686. Their estate included Woodlands (of which William Jones mentioned in the Epitaph p. 339, was then Tenant), the Warren called Barredge, Stockham Mill, &c. The next owners appear to have been the Nourse family, as Sarah, daughter of Henry Nourse Esq. of Woodlands was wife of Charles Finch third Earl of Winchelsea, and in 1713 the Countess of Winchelsea, then widow, and others sold the Manor of Mildenhall to Charles, Earl of Ailesbury. Woodlands became Mr. Calcraft's, from whom it descended to the Wyld family.

The old glass all spoyled in the late warres; on the South side, painted on the wall, is the escutcheon of the Marquesse of Hartford, and the coate of Hungerford. Woodland, in this parish, belongs to Hungerford, but about 100 yeares since to Essex. See "Easton Piers," [P. 239 above.)

In the South Aisle here is this Inscription, no other in the Church:

"Juste judicat: veniemus omnes ad judicium. "Here lyeth the body of William Jones, Gentilman, who departed this life the 8th of Nov. 1610, whose life was religious and honest, at his death godly and charitable so witnessed by the beholders, deservedly commended by the Preacher at his funerall. And here sleepeth with his father the body of John Jones, Gent., his son, whose dayes also ended shortly after, being the 28th of January the same yeare, both whose soules be with the individual Trinity glorified and charitably departed the earthly mansions here, according to their faith published at their departinge, to be saved only by the death and passion, and bloud-shedding of Christ Jesus received their salvation whilst the world doth persecute them."

SAVERNAKE FOREST.

Sturmy's Horne, by which he held the forest of Savernake, is mentioned in "Fuller's Worthies."

Dr. Fuller also makes mention of a sweet fern, which growes in this forest, which the Vicar here tells me he hath seen and smelt: it is like other fern but not so bigge, he knows not where about it grows, but promised to make enquiry. Send also to Mr. Bird of Stock, for some.¹

Mildenhall appears to have been divided among several proprietors besides the Mohuns, in ancient times. In Edw. I., Robert de Stutescomb, under the honour of Beauchamp. The Abbot of Tewkesbury under the Barony of Castle Combe. This was Poulton. [See "Wilts Archæol. Mag." II. 271]. Hugh Doure under the Honour of Wallingford. The Abbot of St. Victor, Ralph Quintin, and the Templars. [See "T. de Nevill."]

In Wilts Institutions, 1526, there is a note "de Unione Eccl. de Myldenhale cum Ecclesiâ de Weleforde." Walter Curle afterwards Bishop of Bath and Wells was Rector here from 1619 to 1629. Also George Morley, Dean of Christ Church and afterwards Bishop of Winchester, from c. 1643. Charles Francis 1788—1821, bequeathed £4000 for a school, of which the foundation stone was laid 24th April 1824. Mr. Waylen, "History of Marlborough," has some memoranda of Mildenhall.

¹ The earliest notice of this Forest that the writer has met with, is a grant of lands at Oare by King Athelstan to Wilton Abbey, A.D. 933. The lands so given were between Oare and the Wansdyke, and they are described as lying "outside the wood called Safernoc." [New Monasticon,

"Wilton," p. 320.] The origin of the name is uncertain. Camden, Fuller and others, finding an old Cornish word "savarn" signifying savour, conceived the Forest to have been called from some plant, such as the Polypodium fragrans, the "sweet fern" mentioned in the text. But though this grows there, it is not rare: nor is it likely to have given the name to a large tract of country. The word is sometimes written in old records with a mark of abbreviation, "Savernak'." If the full name were Savern-acre, it might possibly have some reference to the geological character of the district, which, like that of most of the forests in the S.W. of England, consists of tertiary sand and gravel, overlying the chalk. "Savhr," an ancient word for sand or gravel, is the true derivation of the name of the "sandy bottomed Severn." [Shakspeare's Hen. IV.] In the Cornish language, Skavernak is, a hare, (Borlase.) Scevenoc is the name of a Caernarvonshire river.

In A.D. 1280 the limits of the forest were much more extensive than now. They reached from West Overton (West of Marlborough) to Denford beyond Hungerford; passing round by Buttermere, Collingbourne Kingston, Easton and Pewsey, as far as Warekway (now Workaway) Hill. The family of Esturmy of Wolf-hall were for a long time chief Foresters (paying Fines for the same) under the Crown to whom the whole belonged. Under the Esturmys were sub-foresters, each being keeper of a "Baily," and holding lands in right of their office. Of these were 1. The West Baily, including Bedwyn Brail (bruel: copse) and Harden (now Harding's), of which the keepers were the Harden family, and afterwards Sir Robert Bilkemore 1334. 2. Hippinescombe Baily (another part of which belonged to Chute Forest); kept by the Columbars 1275, and the Pipards. 3. Eastwick Baily, kept by Bonclive of Wick. 4. Southgrove, by Robert de Fortesbury, and in 1352 by the Malwayns. The Prior of Marlborough had rights of feeding for oxen and cows. The Abbot of Hyde had certain liberties. The hounds of Matthew Columbars, kept in his manor of Chisbury, were exempt from "expeditation," i.e. from having a claw cut off. In 1275 the Bishop of Salisbury who had a chace for wolves and hares at Studecomb, as well as the Prior of Okebourn who had a similar privilege in his own neighbourhood, were complained of, as occasionally encroaching in Savernake, to the damage of the King. The King's Forester South of Trent, upon the death of the Chief Forester of Savernak, claimed his horse saddle, bridle, horn, sword, bow and arrows, as a heriot. Lands at Burbach, and Coulsfield in South Wilts, were appurtenant to the office.

The horn at Tottenham Park (now commonly called the Bruce horn) descended to the Bruces, Earls of Ailesbury, through the Seymours from the Esturmys. The possession of it is said to be the title by which the Wardenship of the Forest is held under a charter granted 23rd July, 1 Edw. VI. to Edward, Duke of Somerset. It is of ivory with mountings in enamelled silver. There are no Arms upon the horn itself, but on the belt which is more modern are those of a Scottish family, apparently Randolph Earl of Moray (the Bruce's nephew). In the "Wilts Archæol. Mag." vol. vi. p. 265, are drawings of the horn, and a minute description by the Rev. John Ward.

The oak tree, called the "Duke's Vaunt," having been in younger days the glory of the Protector Duke of Somerset, is still living. The age of this tree must be extraordinary. In 1762 twenty boys were shut up in the hollow of it: and old men then living said it had been in the same state as long as they could remember. ["Gent. Mag." 1802, p. 497.] Dryden probably under-rates the age of such a patriarch, when he says,

"Three centuries he grows, and three he stays Supreme in state: and in three more decays."

The magnificent domain of the Earl of Ailesbury includes much more than Savernake Forest: but the other parts are in a different Hundred. Savernake House was destroyed by fire on 9th March 1861. A new church called Christ Church, a Parsonage House and Schools, have recently been built in the Forest by the Earl of Ailesbury.

¹ There are many Winterbournes in Wilts, and their several histories are not easily traced, the distinctive name not being always added. The word signifies winter-stream.

In 1274 the Jury of the Hundred Court represented that above 40 years before, Walter the Prior had taken away the gallows at Overton and Avebury: and that Luke the Prior had done the same at Winterborne Monkton. [Hundred Rolls.]

building, adjudged near two acres; they say 'twas Sir John Gregorie's.¹

The Parsonage here belonged to the Priory of St. Margaret's, (Marlborough)² as also Purnell's land.³

In the Church is nothing of antiquity to be found, unless a marble with two brasse figures, the Inscription lost.⁴

WINTERBOURNE BASSET.⁵

This Church was dedicated to St. Katharine.¹

In the Chauncell lies interred Ambrose Browne, son of Browne, of this parish, he dyed Anno Dni. 166 . . aged 103. In the windowes here are St. Thomas of Canterbury, and, I think, St. Katharine.

In the North aisle under the windowe, which is of the fashion of Edw. III., is an old nich, within which on a stone is the lineary figure of a man and his wife, of whose name here is no tradicion. I am sorry that new glass is set up in this old window, else, perhaps, I might have found the coat of Basset.

In a kind of Chapell, on the North side of the Church next the Chancel, is this monument, of freestone :

“Here lieth the body of Symon Baskerville, Esqr. sonne of Sir Walter Baskerville, of Earsley, in the County of Hereford,² Knight, which Symon married the widowe of William Hutchins, of Rickarston, who deceased in the yeare of Our Lord God, 1552.”

In the other column :

“Here also lieth the body of William Baskerville, of Wanborough, sonne of the above said Symon Baskerville, who deceased at Rickarston, the 29th day of September, in the yeare of Our Lord God, 1604.”

On a pillar below which, is an altar monument of freestone without inscription ;

The advowson was given by Reginald Dunstanville to the Priory of St. Pancras, Lewes. At the Dissolution it was granted to the Earl of Pembroke : and about 1720 to Magdalen College, Oxon.

Ricardston belonged to Lord Mauduit in 1315. The Abbot of Stanley in Edw. I., William Wroston, or Wroughton, in Rich. II., and the Delamere family, were also owners of land here. The portion of the latter passed in Hen. IV. to their heiress Willelma wife of Sir John Roche, from whom in Hen. VI. to Beauchamp.

Rabson in this parish, anciently Rabbedeston, belonged to the Prioress of Ambresbury.

NORTH BRADLEY.²

THERE is a very fine Church built all of freestone. The windowes here have been extraordinary good. For a windowe by the porch, now all plaine glasse, Westbury, before the warres, would have given fourscore pounds, and glazed the windowe again with plaine glasse. These glorious windowes are now so much defaced there is but enough left for one to guess at former beauty and skill: remaines in the Chancell East windowe Ihs and ff: and this coate: [Pl. xxxii. No. 459, EDINGDON PRIORY.]³

¹ The Lordship of the Hundred of "Wervelesdon" was given by King Edgar to the Abbey of Romsey. On the Dissolution of Monasteries it was granted to Thomas Seymour Lord Sudeley. It now belongs to Mr. Watson Taylor owner of the Edingdon property. The name in Domesday Book is "Wrderusteselle," in the Hundred Rolls "Wervollesdon. Some think it may be Orwolde's, an old name found elsewhere in North Wilts. Wherwell is the name of an Abbey in Hants, and of a wood in Wilts.

The principal manor of North Bradley belongs to the Earl of Mornington by maternal descent from the Longs of Draycote. How and when it came into that family has not been exactly ascertained: but Robert Long (who died 1446) was a land owner under the Abbess of Romsey. One of his wives was Margaret Popham, widow of Wayte. [Deed of 1417.]

³ The shield of Edingdon Monastery; which was still in the window a few years ago. North Bradley Church before A.D. 1351, was a chapelry of the ancient Prebend of Edingdon belonging to Romsey Abbey: and when, in that year, the advowson of Edingdon Prebend was severed from Romsey Abbey and granted to William of Edingdon Bishop of Winchester for the endowment of his new College of Bonhommes at Edingdon, the Rectorial Tithes of North Bradley were appropriated to the Bonhommes and a Vicarage was endowed here. The Tithes and some land, with the Patronage of the Vicarage of "North Bradley and Southwick" were granted (Edw. VI.) to Winchester College. Sir W. Sherington had also a grant of land in 4 Hen. VIII.

² The shield is drawn in our Plate, as given by Aubrey: not being able to distinguish the charge, he made merely five indistinct marks.

⁴ The Font is late Perpendicular; with octagonal bowl and shaft. It is figured in "Paley's Baptismal Fonts."

⁵ In Southwick, a Tything of this parish, two carucates of land belonged A.D. 1274 to William de Greyvile or Greynvile who held under the Abbess of Romsey. About A.D. 1294 his son Adam de Greyvile (there was a Justice in Eyre of this name in 1267) attached to his house at Southwick Court a chapel dedicated to St. John the Baptist. By surrendering to the Rector of Bradley (at that time the Prebendary of Edingdon) a ground called Alerleye, he obtained the right of presenting to his chapel a chantry Priest, who in acknowledgment of fealty was to offer 2lb. of wax in Bradley Church every year on the anniversary of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. In 1369 the Bishop of Sarum granted a license for Mass to be said in the private mansion house of Southwick. This chaplain, in after times, was always instituted to his office, by the Rectors of Edingdon Monastery to whom the Church of Bradley then belonged. [See Edingdon Chartulary, p. 36.]

The Manor of Southwick and the advowson of the chapel at Southwick Court, appear to have passed, about A.D. 1341, by the heiress of Greynville or Greyvile (Hutchins's Dorset, p. 292) to Humphrey Stafford Kt., grandfather of John Stafford, Archbishop of Canterbury. Then by Alice Stafford, an heiress, to Sir Edmund Cheney of Brook Hall: and by their heiress to Sir John Willoughby of Brook, c. 1430. In 1483, during a temporary forfeiture, Southwick was given by Richard III. to his favourite Edward Ratcliffe: but it was restored, and in 1520 was sold by Robert Willoughby Lord Broke to Sir David Owen, a supposed son of Owen Tudor. In his will 1529 (Test. Vet. 701) Sir David Owen mentions this manor and chantry. One portion was sold by Henry Owen to Sir Woolstan Dixie, Lord Mayor of London, who by will 1592 devised his lands here, worth £42 per annum, to Christ's Hospital. Another portion was sold, 1556, by John Owen to Christopher Bayley, whose wife Matilda (Horton) appears to have possessed one third of the manor in her own right. She remarried Walter Bush, who held it for his life. Rebecca Bayley, an heiress, grand-daughter of Christopher, married first, Henry Long of Whaddon, and secondly, Henry Sherfield: (who also held it for life). By another heiress, Rebecca grand-daughter of Henry Long of Whaddon, it passed in marriage to Sir Philip Parker: and on the failure of issue male in his descendant, 1740, it reverted to the Longs of Whaddon, from whom it has passed to the present owner Walter Long Esq. of Rood Ashton. A little view of the old House is given at foot of Plate xxxii.

Some part of Southwick belonging to Edingdon Monastery, was held after the Dissolution, under Sir Thomas Seymour Lord Sudeley, by Ambrose Dauntsey. The Court Book of Southwick is in the Chapter House, Westminster.

At Coteridge in the Tything of Southwick, owners have been, Edingdon Monastery: John Blanchard, 1395: Francis Townsend Esq., 1604: the Trenchard family, of Wolveton, in Charminster, co. Dorset: from about 1655. John Trenchard Esq. of this place, author of "The Independent Whig" died 1723; and was succeeded here by his sister's son Robert Hippiisley Esq. On a monument in the Church are the arms of Trenchard quartering Ashfordby. [See Hutchins's Dorset, "Charminster:" and "Burke's Landed Gentry."]

¹ The beautiful little Chapel, abutting on the North side of North Bradley Church, seems to have been erected by John Stafford, Archbishop of Canterbury 1443—1452, Cardinal and Lord Chancellor of England, as a burial-place for his Mother. About Archbishop Stafford's parentage there has been much confusion, and there is still some mystery. Some (as Dugdale) have called him son of Humphrey Stafford Duke of Buckingham, others, of a Stafford, Earl of Wiltshire, &c. Battely ("Canturia Sacra, p. 75,") says "he was born at Hook, co. Dorset, and was son of Sir Humphrey Stafford 'with the silver hand,' by his wife Elizabeth Dynham." He certainly was the son

curiously carved. I guesse the worke to be about temp. Hen. 6, about which time this kind of gothique architecture was at the height. This was as noble a Chapelle as any in the county: now, (1669), in the windowe like a great bay-windowe, is only one scutcheon left entire, viz., STAFFORD [No. 464]. Another was quarterly, now broken; another thus: [broken, No. 465].¹ At the bottom whereof is a flatt gravestone of freestone well worked, lineally, with the figure of a Lady in a gothique niche. In the limbe (margin) thereof this Inscription:

Hic jacet dñā Emma mater benratissimi patris et Domini Dñi Johis
Stafford Dei grā Cantuariensis Archiepi que obiit quinto die mensis Septembris Anno Dñi Millesimo CCCC^{mo} quadragesimo VI^{to}. Cuius aīe ppicietur Deus. Amen. (☉ Deus trina me John conserva ruina.)

[“Here lieth the Lady EMMA, mother of the most Reverend Father and Lord, John Stafford by the grace of God Lord Archbishop of Canterbury: who died 5th Sept. A.D. 1446. On whose soul God have mercy. Amen. O Triune God, save me, John, from perdition.”]

In the limbe of this windowe are these fragments: Emme matris d ... dñi Johis Archiepi r dicti In the top of this windowe, and also of the other, are in scrolles, “Gnothi scauton; Nosce tripsum.”² The other windowe is all broken but the scrolles aforesaid, only the picture of the Archbishop, except his of Sir Humphrey, of Southwick, but not by Elizabeth Dynham, nor by his second wife Alice Beville, (if that Christian name is given rightly in “Coll. Top. and Gen.,” VI., 335); for the inscription still in the chapel, gives Emma as his mother’s Christian name, but without any surname. This appears in some degree to corroborate the traditions that he was, “ignotā matre inhonestus.” Dr. Thomas Gascoigne (“Lewis’s Life of Pecock,” 8vo., p. 19), says “bastardus origine.” but the Doctor’s authority alone may not be altogether trustworthy, as he wrote in a spirit not over-friendly to the prelates of Henry VI. The Archbishop succeeded in 1443 to some lands at Blunsdon, co. Wilts, on the death of Robert Andrews and his widow. The tomb is still standing in the Chapel at North Bradley.

head, remains, of curious painted glass: he is in his formalities, with pall, crosier, &c. in a cope of sky-colour. In the limbe of this windowe hujus capelle Archiepi. Cantuar In the carved wooden worke of the rooffe, are several little hunting figures, as of men carrying a deer, shooting a deer in a wood, &c. One scutcheon [No. 466] of Hungerford in wood.¹ This Chapell is built out-side the church, as Hungerford's at Sarum, but the scutcheons of stone are not charged.

John Stafford made Bishop of Welles 1425, translated to Canterbury 1443: his arms with the mitre are in the Hall next to Polydore Virgil's house at Welles.

EDINGDON PRIORY.²

¹ Probably in compliment to the Hungerford Family who were owners of Langham (near Road) in the Tything of Southwick.

² The parish of Edingdon comprises Edingdon, Tynhide and Baynton, and West Coulston. It is perhaps the "Ethandun" mentioned in King Alfred's Will. In the year 968 King Edgar gave the manor and an estate, about two thirds of the parish in value, to the Nuns of Romsey Abbey in Hampshire: but owing to the loss of Romsey Cartulary, it is not easy to distinguish with certainty the precise extent of the grant. Of Edingdon Church property, the earliest knowledge we have is, that the Rectory, with the Chapel of St. Nicholas of North Bradley annexed, formed a Prebend of Romsey Abbey. The Abbess, as Patron, presented the Prebendary Rector: who being an absentee, nominated a Vicar to reside in charge of the parish. The names of the following Prebendary Rectors have been met with. In 1286, John de Berwick. 1294, John de Romsey. 1302, John de London. 1312, Gilbert de Middleton. 1334, Robert de Stratford. 1337, John St. Paul. 1338, Gilbert de Bruera. 1351, John de Edindon. All these were appointed by the Abbess of Romsey. This state of things continued till the 14th century, when an important change was effected through the influence of a Churchman of the greatest eminence in the reign of Edw. III.

That William of Edingdon was born (about A.D. 1300) either in the parish, or of a family belonging to it, ("de quâ villâ traxit originem," being the words of a document that connects him with this place); that his parents bore the Christian names of Roger and Avise (no surname being given): and that he had a brother Sir John de Edindon a Knight (whose son was the last Prebendary Rector, already mentioned), are facts supplied by the Cartulary of Edingdon Priory. He was educated at Oxford, became Rector of Cottingham, then of Dallington, both in co. Northampton; afterwards of Middleton Cheney, co. Oxford: then Prebendary of Leighton Manor co. Lincoln, Dean of Westbury on Trym, co. Gloucester, and (by the patronage of Adam de Orleton, Bishop of Winchester), Rector of Cheriton, co. Hants. On the death of that Prelate in 1345, he was appointed to the See of Winchester, and was made Lord Treasurer. Soon after his promotion he turned his thoughts to the spiritual wants of his native village: and by an arrangement with the Abbess of Romsey, he obtained in 1351 a licence from the Crown to appropriate the revenue of the Prebendal Church of Edingdon for the purpose of making a better provision for the parishioners. The parish was large and populous, and greatly lacked the services of Ministers. The Bishop founded a Chantry, consisting of a Warden and two secular Chaplains, (with the intention of adding three more,) to which Chantry the Church of Edingdon was annexed. The Prebendary, hitherto generally an absentee and therefore a sinecurist, was to become the resident Warden, in charge of the parishioners, but still to bear the dignity of a Canon of Romsey Monastery. Scarcely however had the first Warden, Walter Scarlet, been appointed, when the Bishop altered his mind and determined to convert this small Fraternity into a regular Monastery, and to build an entirely new Monastic Church, the one still remaining at Edingdon. On 3rd July 1352 the first stone of the new Priory was laid, and in the meantime the Chantry and secular Chaplains continued. In 1358 the second, and last, Warden, Walter de Sevenhampton was appointed: and in February 1359, the new Priory house being ready, the secular priests of the Chantry (all but the Warden, who declined) received their first Tonsure, as Monks regular, under the legal title of "The Rector and Brethren" of Edingdon. They were of the Order of St. Augustine, but of a particular class called "Boni Homines" or "Bonhommes." This was selected by the Bishop at the suggestion, it is said, of the Black Prince, who had returned from France with some motive for favouring that species of Monasticism. There was at the time only one Religious House of the Order in England, viz., at Ashridge in Bucks. Edingdon became the second, and there were never any others. In 1361 the Priory Church was finished. In the Royal Charter of confirmation it is described as dedicated to St. Mary, St. Katharine, and All Saints.

The property with which the Priory was endowed, chiefly by the Bishop himself during his life-time, was as follows. Romsey Abbey still retained in this parish the manor and large estate originally granted by King Edgar, but the Priory of Edingdon had the Tithes and other Rectorial property that had belonged to the original Prebend, with the Chapel of North Bradley. It had elsewhere in the co. Wilts, the Advowson of Steeple, or East, Lavington, with the Chapel of Gore: lands at Eastcot (in Urchfont), with the presentation to the Chapel: lands at South Imber: the impropriated tithes and patronage of Keevil and Bulkington: lands at Baynton (but not the presentation to the Chapel): the Manor of Highway in Bremhill (afterwards exchanged, see above, p. 60): also part of the Manor of Tynhide (now Tinhead) in Edingdon, on the death of the founder's brother Sir John de Edingdon: lands at Esthorp, Westhorp, and Hampton Turville, near Highworth, of which some part was given to maintain an Obit in the Priory Church, founded in 1365 by Sir Thomas Hungerford of Heytesbury, purchaser of Farley Castle. Besides the above, the Priory had certain smaller possessions in its own neighbourhood, at Kingston Deverell, Dilton, Bratton, Penley's, &c. In Berkshire it had the Manor of Coleshill (being the largest of all its estates) and the Rectory of Buckland near Faringdon, with the Chapel of Burwardsote (Burcote) annexed. In Gloucestershire, the Manor and Advowson of Tormarton: in Hampshire, the tithes impropriate of Newton Valence: in Oxfordshire, the Manor of Alvescote, lands at Alwardsbury, West Ilsley, &c.

The founder was made Chancellor of England in 1357; and in 1366, having declined the See of Canterbury, he died, and was buried at Winchester Cathedral. His monument is figured in Britton's account of that church. His Will has not been met with.

The following are the names of the Rectors of Edingdon Priory. The first (who came from Ashridge) was John de Aylesbury, in 1358. In 1382 Thomas Odyham. In 1414 Thomas Culmer. In 1433 Thomas Elme. (To this period the Bishops of Winchester were patrons: afterwards the Brethren.) In 1450, William Godwyn. In 1464 William Newton. Ditto, William Hull or Hill. In 1494 John St. John. In 1515 John Ryve, and finally in 1538, Paul Bush.

On 29th June 1450, William Ayscough, Bishop of Salisbury, in order to escape from the violence of a tumult in that city, fled for refuge to Edingdon Priory. He was pursued, and whilst officiating at the High Altar, was dragged from the Church to a neighbouring hill, and there murdered.

The Priory was seized by the Crown in 1534, but was not immediately dissolved; for in 1538 Lord Cromwell, as Privy Seal, appointed Paul Bush, the last Rector: who in the following year surrendered it, and was made first Bishop of the New See of Bristol. A portrait of him is in the possession of the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The Cartulary of Edingdon Priory is No. 442 Lansd. MS. in the British Museum: and an alphabetical list of its contents is printed in the "New Monasticon" vi. p. 535. The Arms of the house, were, Or, on a cross engrailed Gules five cinquefoils Argent. The Monastic Seal is appended to the Deed of Surrender in the Augmentation Office. It represents the Apostles Peter and Paul: over them the Blessed Virgin and child: below, an ecclesiastic with a crosier. The legend is "S. COMMUNE. RECTORIS. (ET.) CONVENTUS. (DE.) EDYNDON. The arms on Bishop Edingdon's private seal, among the Archives of Winchester College, are, On a cross engrailed five mullets pierced.

After the Dissolution, Thomas, Lord Seymour of Sudeley, obtained in the parish of Edingdon both the manor and lands belonging to Romsey Abbey, and the church property, land and tithes, belonging to Edingdon Priory. Upon his execution in 1549, all these were granted to Sir William Pawlett, Earl of Wiltshire, and first Marquis of Winchester. During the ownership of the Pawlett family, the Priory was leased, in 1551, to Sir Edward Hastings and Lady Elizabeth Bayntun. In 1565 the lease belonged to Sir James Stumpe of Malmesbury, whose wife was a Bayntun of Bromham. In 1599 it was the residence of William Jones; and, about the beginning of the 17th century, of Sir William Paulett a natural son of the third Marquis of Winchester. Another lessee was Sir Edward Lewis of the Van, co. Glamorgan, who married Anne Sackville widow of Sir Edward Seymour, Lord Beauchamp. Sir Edward Lewis's monument, on the South side of the chancel, bears the effigies of himself and his lady. The Arms are those of Lewis (quartering 3 Welsh coats, Colwyn ap Tango, Gestyn ap Gwrgant and Caradoc Vreichfar) impaling Sackville. He died 1630. A brass plate on the floor records her death 25th September 1664. Their son Richard Lewis was residing at the Priory when he purchased Corsham (as mentioned above p. 79). Lord Harry Paulett father of the two last Dukes of Bolton, was the next occupier. He died 1759. (The sign of an Inn, formerly at Tinhead, popularly called "the Three Daggers" was, properly, the arms of the Pauletts, 3 swords in pile.) In 1768 Peter Delmé Esq. of Earlstoke treated with the Trustees of the fifth Duke of Bolton for the purchase of the Edingdon estates, but no conveyance was ever made: and in 1784, under the power of a Private Act, they were sold to Mr. Joshua, and Mr. (afterwards Sir) Drummond, Smith. The former was survivor, and at his death they were sold by his coheiresses to the Trustees of Simon Taylor Esq. elder brother of Sir John Taylor, Bart. Sir John's son Sir Simon Richard Brissett Taylor, second Bart., dying unmarried, the estates were settled on his eldest sister Anna Susannah, whose eldest son Simon Watson Taylor Esq. is now the owner. [See above, p. 299.] Of the remains of the Priory House there is a small view in "Gent. Mag." 1846.

The Priory Church (described in "Wilts Archæol. Mag." iii. 47) is a fine example of the Transition from the Decorated to the Perpendicular style. The tracery of the tower windows is worked in the pattern of a cross flory, and, in the West windows of the aisles, in that of a cross saltier flory: the allusion probably being to the arms of the Pavelys (Lords of Westbury Hundred), patrons and friends of the founder. At the end of the South Transept is a large altar-monument with an ecclesiastical effigy under a canopy, not yet identified. The letters of a monogram upon it appear to be I. B. (not T. B. as stated by a mistake of the present writer in "Wilts Archæol. Mag." I. 188); and a rebus, or device, of a branch of bay issuing from a tun, seems to indicate a John Bayntun: but there is no known member of the Priory who bore that name. On a stone at the West end of the South aisle are the arms of the See of Winchester, encircled with stars. Under one of the arches, South side of the nave, beneath a stone canopy, is the altar-tomb of Sir Ralph Cheney of Brook House in Westbury, who married one of the coheiresses of Sir John Pavely c. 1361. Sir Ralph died in 1400. The brasses and inscription are gone, but these arms are on the monument. On the side facing the nave: upon the canopy, 1. Cheney. 2. Ditto. 3. Cheney quartering Pavely. On the tomb itself, 1. Cheney and Pavely badge, a rudder. 2. Cheney. 3. Four escallops 2 and 2, Erlegh? On the side facing South aisle: on the canopy, 1. Cheney impaling Pavely. 2. Pavely. 3. Ditto. On the tomb, 1. The rudder. 2. Cheney. 3. Erlegh? On the North side of the chancel is a Cenotaph to the memory of Simon Taylor Esq. (above-mentioned) of Lyssons Hall, Jamaica: and within the Altar-rails, against the North wall, a fine monumental group, by Sir Francis Chantrey, representing the deathbed of his nephew (also above-mentioned) Sir Simon Richard Brissett Taylor, the second Baronet.

Besides the Abbess's estate, there were some lay-properties, and the name of Ashton being appended to various subdivisions of the Manor, it became in course of time, convenient to distinguish the principal one by the prefix of "Steeple;" the parish church being situated upon it. It is so called in Deeds of Edw. I. and II. The Cartulary of Romsey Abbey (as already mentioned under "Edington,") having been lost, and the list of its estates being unfortunately omitted in the Valor Ecclesiasticus, we are left to private documents for the knowledge of what it possessed in this neighbourhood. From these it appears that the Abbess's demesne lay chiefly in Steeple Ashton proper, that other smaller manors within the parish were held as of her manor, paying quit rents or other acknowledgements: and that she also had lands, or manorial rights, in adjacent parishes, as North Bradley, Bulkington, Hilperton, Tydulside (Tilshead) and Trowbridge.

After belonging to Romsey Abbey for 571 years, the estate was broken up and sold, probably to those who had been Abbey tenants. The names of the principal freeholders in the parish between the Dissolution and A.D. 1604, whose lands lay within the manorial jurisdiction of the late Abbey were as follows. Brouncker, Greenhill, (of which family was John Greenhill a very distinguished painter, temp. Charles II. See a long memoir of him in Hatcher and Benson's "Salisbury," p. 629); Marks, and Martyn. These had only done suit at the Abbess's court. The next paid small quit-rents: viz., Blagden, Clement, Flower, Hooke, Hutchins (of "Leach Court"), Lambe (of Henton), the Longs of Whaddon, of Lavington, Rood Ashton, West Ashton and Semington; Palmer, Pryor, Silverthorn, Sumner (of Littleton), Stillman, Turben (of Henton), Sir Francis Fane (one of the representatives of the Sheringtons of Lacock Abbey), Westley, Whatley, Sir Richard White, Kt., and Whitaker.

The general Lordship of the whole Manor, was granted at the Dissolution to Sir Thomas Seymour, Lord Sudeley, the Protector Somerset's brother. (Part of Sir Thomas's Court Roll is in the possession of J. Moore Esq. of West Coker, co. Somerset.) On his attainder and execution in 1549, the lordship reverted to the Crown, and in 1610 it formed part of the maintenance of Prince Henry, son of James I., its profits (in chief rents, timber on wastes, &c.), being then returned at £85 5s. 5d. per annum. The greater part of the various estates obtained (as above mentioned) by different individuals at the Dissolution, as well as the general lordship, became, chiefly by purchase, concentrated in the Long family, and are now the property of Walter Long Esq., M.P. of Rood Ashton.

The Rectory of Steeple Ashton was impropriate to Romsey Abbey, which appointed the Vicar, until the Dissolution. The Crown was then Patron until 1676. Then the Martyn family. In 1698 Mr. Drue Drury of Riddlesworth Hall, co. Norfolk, gave by Will the impropriate Parsonage to Magdalen College, Cambridge, for the maintenance of "The Norfolk Travelling Fellowship." The Master of the College now nominates the Vicar.

St. Mary's Church. The body of the present handsome church was built between A.D. 1480 and 1500. Robert Long of this place, and Edith his wife, built the North aisle. Walter Lucas and Maud his wife the South aisle. The fine tower had at first a spire, but that was destroyed by lightning twice in the same year, viz. on 25th July, and 15th October, 1670. [See Aubrey's Natural History of Wilts, p. 17.] The West ends of both aisles, are of earlier date than the body of the church. The Chancel, formerly very plain, was re-built by subscription in 1853, in a style corresponding with the rest. The Font was given by the present Vicar, the Rev. Richard Crawley and his sisters. There are monuments to Henry Long Esq. of Rood Ashton, died 1672, and others of his family: also to Beach, Bennett (of this parish and of Comb-Hay), John Smith, M.P. for Bath, Cary (of Hampstead), Hicks, Martyn, Wainhouse, Browne, and Darcy. There was once a little brass bearing this inscription, "Virgo quid loquitur quæris? Lege. Tu morieris Maria Carpenter:" probably of the family of Henry Carpenter, Vicar, 1636. Among the Vicars have been George Webbe, 1605, (son of Hugh Webbe, Rector of Bromham,) who became Bishop of Limerick 1634, and died whilst confined in Limerick Castle by the Rebels 1641. An engraving of him is prefixed to one of his publications called "The Practice of Quietness." Gabriel Sangar, 1662. He was first Rector of Sutton Mandeville, then of St. Martin's in the Fields, London: and was ejected from Steeple Ashton by the Act of Uniformity. [See Calamy.] Samuel Hey, appointed 1787, third son of Richard Hey of Pudsey near Leeds, brother of John Hey, D.D., Norrisian Professor at Cambridge, and of William Hey, a late very celebrated surgeon at Leeds. He bequeathed a Vicar's Library; and was buried in the churchyard 1828. A monument erected by the Parishioners to his memory is placed in the South Aisle of the Church. The Registers begin 1538. The Vicarage House was much enlarged by the present Vicar, Mr. Crawley.

Some parts of the Manor, not now to be identified, were anciently called Middle Ashton, Salcer's Ashton, (from a family "De Salceto,") and Hurdecot's Ashton.

WEST ASHTON. In 1449 William de Westbury, Justice of the Common Pleas, who founded a chapel in Westbury Church, possessed a house and some lands at this hamlet. Sir William Stourton of Stourton who died 1413 was owner of the Manor, and of East Hills, held under Romsey Abbey. In 1543 William sixth Baron Stourton sold this, (together with the Manors of Hilperton and Whaddon and the patronage of Hilperton Rectory), to Thomas Long of Trowbridge. The name of "Stourton" is still borne by a Hill, adjoining the park at Rood Ashton.

Paxcroft, (anciently Packel's Croft). There are two farms of this name. 1. One adjoining Hilperton, was held under Romsey Abbey in 1254 by Henry de Whaddon. In 1700 it belonged to Matthew Burgess: in 1711 to John Hall Esq. of Bradford on Avon, who charged it with £40 a year for his Almshouse in that town. From his family it passed by marriages to that of the present owner Earl Manvers. 2. Paxcroft Overcourt; which lies eastward of the former. It was sold by Charles Blount Lord Mountjoy in 1599 to Henry Long of Whaddon.

Mr. Thomas Beach became an owner at West Ashton about 1660. He was of a family, once living at Warminster: from which came also the Beaches of Netheravon and Keevil. He was Steward to the Longleat estates, to the Crown for Steeple Ashton, and to Lady Elizabeth Seymour for Trowbridge. He died 1729 aged 92. His family removed to Woolley near Bradford on Avon. The last male heir Lieutenant-Colonel Thomas Beach changed his name to De la Beche. Their estate at West Ashton was purchased by R. G. Long Esq. On it was a Labyrinth or Mizmaze, mentioned by Aubrey 1670. "King's Coffee House" in Covent Garden, took its name from a native of West Ashton, Thomas son of Harman King. He was a scholar at Eton, but resigned his scholarship, and set up the tavern.

West Ashton was made a separate District; and St. John's Church was built and consecrated in 1846.

ROOD, or CHAPEL, ASHTON: so called from a chapel traditionally said to have stood here. A "Rood" was properly the Image of our Saviour on the Cross. Rood Ashton was a separate Manor held under Romsey Abbey. In 1306 John Biset (descended from Manasseh Biset founder of Maiden Bradley Priory) was owner. In 1391 John Crouchton. In 1440 John Temys (see Pedigree, Bowles's "Lacock:") of which family was Joan Temys the last Abbess of Lacock. Her nephew William Temys of London sold it to William Button Esq. of Alton (father of Sir William Button of Tockenham: see above, p. 193). They held it only a few years, when it was bought about 1593 by Edward Long of Monkton. The house was greatly enlarged in 1835 by the present owner Walter Long Esq., M.P.

EAST TOWN: formerly called from an old owner Silden or Silden's Ashton. A family of Palmer is mentioned as of this place in 1368 (Edingdon Cartulary), which continued till 1768 when Stephen Palmer by will left freehold lands here for an Education Charity, but the devise was void. They were also connected with Tellisford, co. Somerset. There were two families of Martyn in Steeple Ashton: one of which lived at East-town. Their arms were, Argent, an eagle with two heads displayed, Gules. Elizabeth the last of this family married Robert Ashe Esq. of Langley Burrell. A Mrs. Elizabeth Martyn left a charity to this parish. Mr. Long is now owner of East-town.

HENTON. The Gores of Alderton had property here in 1442, which was sold in 1579 to William Brouncker of Earlstoke. The property of the Martyns of Henton merged by a marriage in that of the Longs. The arms of Martyn of Henton were Gules, two bars Argent.

SEMINGTON, is a Tything and Chapelry of Steeple Ashton. Among the Additional Charters in the British Museum (No. 5091) is a Latin Decree regulating the appointment of a Chaplain, and of burials in St. George's Chapel. The document issued from Richard Beauchamp, Bishop of Sarum, and was executed in the Parish Church of Bromham, 28th May, 1470. It has a fine impression of the Bishop's Seal. Henry Long of Wraxhall by will 1490 bequeathed 20s. to this chapel for vestments. In Nichols's "Bibliotheca Topogr.," Vol. VI., p. 68, is an incorrect copy by Dr. Pegge (who mis-calls the village, Swinnington) of an ancient French inscription on a small square stone still to be seen at the side of the church door. It is very much worn, but from a rubbing carefully taken by Mr. E. Kite, the words appear to be these, "♣ KY PATER NOSTER : E : AVE MARIA : PUR LE ALME PUR FELEPPUR DE SALC EST Ɔ CRESTIENS DIRRA : QUARANTE : JUR : DE PARDUN AVERA : AMEN." ["Whoever shall say a Pater Noster and an Ave-Maria for the souls, for Philippa de Salcest [quære], and Christians, shall have 40 days of pardon."] The name is doubtful, but it may be that of "Salcer" or "De Salceto," already mentioned as a family in Steeple Ashton parish. It is found in Deeds of Edw. I. and II. The Church was restored, and re-opened for Service 18th December, 1860.

¹ "Dering-ton" belonged at the Conquest to the Earl Albericus. In Edw. II. John de Neyhill, Canon of Sarum, and Prebendary, is returned as Lord of the Vill. From 1293 to 1395 several generations of Gilbert de Neville are found here as owners. [I. p. M.] Elizabeth heiress of the last appears to have married Sir John Delawarr, who died 1397. In 1397 St. Mary's Winton had lands. In 1464 John Thorpe; in 1587 Philip Poore. The Rectory belonged to Ambresbury Monastery till the Dissolution: at which time the Dean and Chapter of Sarum had rents of assize, £10 10s. per annum, charged with an annual distribution to the church officers and the poor, of £5 12s. 7d. and prayers for the soul of Robert Beaver the founder. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester now present to the Perpetual Curacy. Sir R. C. Hoare has some notes on "Durrington," "History of Amesbury," pp, 41, 156, 175: and in "Ancient Wilts," vol. i. 169, there is an account of "Durrington Walls," supposed to have been a British settlement. The plough has turned up many spearheads, palstaves, &c., here.

On the wall: Arms, [No. 468] CONHAM impaling [BADBY].

"To the memorie of that worthy Matron, M^{rs}. Hester Conham, widowe indeed, granddaughter to Mr. Thomas Higbed, Martyr,¹ and wife of the Wor.^y Abraham Conham,² Bachelour in Divinity, and Chanon resident sometime of the Cathedrall Church of Sarum, who deceased 3rd of April, 1647, aged 79.

If righteous age a crowne of glorie be
Then sure this crowne was doubly due to thee,
Who wast less old than righteous, yet 'tis told Thou livd'st unto the Prophets wondrous old."

In the South aisle, in a large annulet a cross flory Gules [No. 469]. By the Pulpit, in a seat, the arms [No. 470 BESSOME?] with mantling. The crest is a kind of peigne Gules.³ In Mr. Poor's seate, above in the roof, is this scutcheon [No. 471]: Quarterly 1 and 4 POORE. 2. CLARKE. 3. (BADBY.)

Mem. On the North Wall is painted a huge St. Christopher.

(By a later hand.) This Church was blown down in the stormy weather, about August 20th, 1693.

FIGHELDEN.

Near the Belfre, in the South Aisle, are two fair freestone monuments of Knights crosse-legged, with shields, and at the feet of each is a Lyon. I could not learne

² Abraham Conham was Rector and Vicar of Bishopston near Sarum, 1584—1612, and Rector of Gussage St. Michael, co. Dorset, 1595—1612. His wife was a Badby: and one of their daughters married Walter White Esq. of Grittleton (see p. 129): the other, Edward Poore Esq. The name of Conham has probably some affinity to Conyngham: the crest of the latter being, On a mount, a stork, holding a snake.

Some of the Communion Plate bears the name of "Ambrose Webbe Cl. 1702."

whose Monuments they were: they are tumbled now, 1671, one on the top of the other.¹

LUDGARSHALL.

Here is a small market and the ruins of a castle.²

Fighelden Church was given by King Henry I. to Roger, Bishop of Sarum. The Rectory is united to the Treasurership of Salisbury. The Vicarage used to be a Peculiar. The Church, which was in various styles, having been erected at different periods between A.D. 1100 and 1600, is dedicated to St. Michael. It has been restored, and was re-opened on 9th May, 1860. The Tower, of which the lower part is ancient Norman, has been raised fifteen feet. The rise of the Chancel is by seven steps from the Nave. A new East window is filled with stained glass in memory of Mr., Mrs., and Miss Clift: and on the South side of the church the Eastern-most window is in memory of the African Missionary the Rev. H. J. Leacock. The oak altar-table was given by Dr. Hamilton, the present Bishop of Salisbury.

² There are very few notices in the Public Records of this place and it is sometimes confounded in topographical works with Ludgarshall co. Bucks. The ancient name was Lutegar's Hall, the residence of some Saxon owner. It was held at the Conquest by Edward of Salisbury, but must have reverted to the Crown, as the Vill, Domain and Castle were in the hands of the Kings of England, from Hen. II. Governors were often appointed to this and Marlborough Castle together. The Empress Maud took shelter in it A.D. 1141. The seal of her great partizan Milo of Gloucester, Earl of Hereford and Constable of England (see "Acts of Stephen"), was found in the neighbourhood some years ago. ["Archæol." vol. xiv.] The Castle was part of the large grant made by King Rich. I. to his brother John. Geoffrey Fitz-piers, Chief Justice of England and (after marriage with Beatrix daughter of William le Saye) Earl of Essex, was governor 1205. He appears to have been called after it, as one Record speaks of him as "Ludgershall, named Geffrey." King John was here in 1212. The next governor, 1225, was Jollan de Nevill, a Justice Itinerant temp. Hen. III. supposed to have been the compiler of the "Book of Fees" called "Testa de Nevill." In 1242 Roger, fourth Lord Clifford, being with the same King at Hereford, repressing the incursions of the Welsh, was appointed; but he fell from his allegiance and joined the rebellious Barons under Montfort. In 1245 Robert de Mucegros. (An order to him for certain additions to be made to the King's apartments and for the History of "Dives and Lazarus" to be painted, is printed in Waylen's "Marlborough," p. 49. Henry III. dates a Deed at Lutegarshall 26th November 1249.) Hugh Parget 1255. Robert Waterman 1259. Stephen Fromund 1265. In 1334 it was part of the maintenance of Philippa Queen of Edw. I. In 1448 it was granted, with the office of Parker there, to William Ludlow and the heirs male of his body. In 1456 to Edmund Tudor Earl of Richmond half-brother to the King, Hen. VI. In 1464 by Edw. IV. to George Duke of Clarence, with a park of 200 acres at Collingbourne. In 1540 at the time of Leland's visit, the Castle was "clene down," but a Lodge had been recently built out of the ruins and still belonged to the Crown. In Edw. VI. it was granted to the first Earl of Bedford, but appears to have become very soon afterwards the property of the Bridges family, ancestors of the Duke of Chandos. Sir Richard Brydges K.B. of this place, for which he was M.P. 1553, and of Shefford, Berks, married Jane daughter of Sir William Spencer of Wormleighton, co. Warwick. There is a fine, but dilapidated monument to them in the church. He died 1558. She was living here with her younger son Edmund 1587. In 1751 it belonged to John Selwyn Esq., who by Will that year bequeathed it to his father. George Augustus Selwyn was afterwards proprietor of the borough, 1763. There is a memoir of him in Annual Register 1791. His heir was Lord Sidney, who sold his interest to Sir James Graham of Kirkstall, co. York. Oldfield (v. 215) says that "some of the favoured spots of land which gave the right of Election might be covered with a hearth-stone." Ludgershall returned members to Parliament in Edw. I.; and was disfranchised in 1832. Grose gives a view of some pieces of wall which are all that is left of the Castle. From some round-headed fragments of windows among them, the late Mr. Britton pronounced it Norman.

BIDDSDEN in this parish belonged to Ambresbury Monastery. At a later period to Lt. Gen. John Richmond Webb, the Duke of Marlborough's great friend, who was killed at the battle of Malplaquet, 11 Sept., 1709. [Coll. Top. et Gen. vii., 30.] It was purchased from his descendants by the Everetts c. 1795. A pension out of the Rectory of Ludgershall, together with the right of Presentation, belonged to Ambresbury Monastery. In the Sarum Registers the Presentations to Ludgershall run in the name of "Budesden" from 1306; "Ludgarshall," 1446; "Ludgarshall and Budesden," 1454; afterwards "Ludgershall" from 1465. Jane, Lady Bridges, widow, presented 1566. Selwyn 1763. Now the Graham family. The Church is dedicated to St. James. In the Autobiography of Sir John Bramston (Camden Soc.) p. xx. is mentioned James B. Bramston, Rector of Ludgershall, author of "Man of Feeling," and other poems., c. 1730. The name does not occur in the printed lists of Incumbents, either of this parish, or of Ludgershall in Bucks.

TISBURY.¹

UÆRE G. Lawes, if no old fortification here? Methinkes there should, because of the termination bury, i.e. burgh, i.e. a place that has workes, i.e. ramparts, about it.

This Mannour did anciently belong to the Nunnes of Shaftesbury.

Here is a faire Church : the Chancell was collegiate, prout per stalles.²

Mem. In the roof both of the South and North aisle which is very good timber-work, well carved, on a shield resting against a crosier, is this coate [Pl. xxxiii, No. 472].³ This must certainly be the Arms of Shaftesbury Abbess. On each side, E.S. "Anno Domini MCCCCXXI. parochiani hoc.....construxerunt."³

Two scutcheons, not coloured, in the Church timber; [No. 473], like WHITOKESMEDE,^a impaled with fretty,¹ and [No. 474] The CHURCH OF SARUM impaled with Bishop AUDLEY, (A.D. 1502—24.) The windows are much broken: remains only South side, WILLOUGHBY [No. 475]: and by it, another escutcheon, Gules, with some things Or, about the borders, like Chamberlayne's coate. Desiré my brother to see it, for 'twas a dimm day, and winter.

Concidit, et factum est terra quod ante fuit.
Vivet ad æternum pars ducta ob origine cœli
Mens generosa, nitens, sancta, recepta Deo.
Cum tuba terribilis Justi vocitarit ad aulam
Sorte necis spretâ, vivet utrumque polo.”

“ Here lyeth the body of LAWRENCE HYDE, late of West Hatch, Esqr., who had yssue by Anne his wife, 6 sonnes and 4 daughters, and died the viith day of June, in the yeare of the Incarnation of our Lord God 1590. Beati qui moriuntur in Domino.”

On the edge thus.

“ This Lawrence Hyde was the third sonne of Robert Hyde of sonnes by Anne his wife being the daughter of Nicholas Sibell, of Chimbhams, in the countie of Kent, Esqr. Hamonet & Edward dyed in their infancy, the rest survived their father.”

In Brass. 1. HYDE [No. 477.] 2. SIBELL, a Tiger regardant on a mirror; [No. 478.] He in his lawyer's gowne; six sonnes in gownes with hanging sleeves: his wife and four daughters.²

A Cross between I.S. and this;

“Here lieth Mr. WILLIAM ARUNDELL³ the 2d sonne of Thomas the first Lord Arundell of Wardour by his first wife Maria Wriothesley, the only daughter of Thomas, Earle of Southampton. He was married to Maria Browne the eldest daughter of Antony Maria Viscount Mountague, being the relict of William Lord St. John of Basing, eldest son of William Lord Marquess of Winchester: he dyed the 15th May, 1650, ætat. 65, leaving his beloved wife to mourne and pray for him, by whom he had many children.”

Another Cross between I.S. “Jesus have mercy upon us.” In brasse;

In the South aisle of this Church are marble gravestones, but brasse and inscription lost. In the North aisle an old gothique monument sans inscription.

² The lower strata of the Portland Rock. The late Miss Ethelred Bennet says, “The Portland beds are in great strength at Tisbury ; and Chicksgrove quarry in that Parish, is one of more than usual interest to the geologist on account of the fine section which it shows of sixteen beds of this series singularly rich in organic remains : and the Purbeck beds on Lady Down, also in the parish of Tisbury, have shewn that they contain the ichthyological treasures of Dorsetshire. The siliceous madrepore” (commonly called “Tisbury flint”) “is a subordinate bed in this series and which has not yet been found elsewhere, with the exception of the agatized madreporas of Antigua. It lies over the Portland Rock : and is extremely local.” [“Hundred of Warminster,” p. 118].

HERE is a great Warren for hares ; it belongs to the Crowne. Here is a large oaken coppice, but it growes but very poorly ; it delights not in the chalkie soile.

..... Sadler built the great house here, upon a lease of a hundred yeares. I guesse, by the architecture, 'twas about the time of Q. Elizabeth or

² For some account of Everley see "Hoare's Modern Wilts." Fine air and spacious downs have always made it a favourite region for sporting. The Manor having been a long time parcel of the Duchy of Lancaster was granted by the Crown 11th August, 1547, to Edward, Duke of Somerset, in exchange for the late Prebends of All Cannings and Erchfont, the Rectories of Ambresbury, Froxfield and Erchfont, in Wilts, and others. After the Duke's execution it was granted by King Henry VIII. to Sir Ralph Sadleir his Chief Secretary of State, afterwards Falconer to Queen Elizabeth, and jailer to Mary Queen of Scots at Tutbury Castle. He is said to have built part of Everley House. In 1545 there was an Act for the legitimation of the children of Sir Ralph, and Ellen his wife. He died 1587. In 1591 Henry his son was owner. [The Earl of Hertford, John Chainey, and Richard Fishe, were also Freeholders. See Survey, "Wilts Archæol. Mag.," VI., 193]. He died 17th March, and his son and heir Henry ten days before him, 1618. Both were buried in Hungerford Church. These seem to have been the last of the Sadleirs here. The Manor next belonged to Sir John Evelyn of West Dean. His only son George died in infancy : and an only surviving daughter married the Honourable Mr. Pierrepont, second son of the Earl of Kingston. The next owner was Robert, third son of Sir William Barker. [Ext. Barts.] In 1727 was printed a Case before the House of Lords relating to this Manor and other estates of R. Barker deceased. In 1764 the estate was purchased by Sir John Astley of Patteshull, co. Stafford, ancestor of the present owner Sir Francis Dugdale Astley, Baronet. In the house are two curious paintings : one, on wood, of Sir Ralph Sadleir, which has been engraved and coloured : the other, of a Duel on horseback in Smithfield between John de Astley and an Arragonian

K. James. Here is a drawing well of a prodigious depth, with a wheel. On the windowe of the house in stone is a demy Lyon crowned. Query to what name it belongs? [Crest of SADLEIR.] In this church is no monument of the Sadlers.

In the Church is this escutcheon [Pl. xxxiii. No. 479. BARNARDISTON quartering MANNING: over it "1645."] Below: "OBIIT 30^{mo} DIE MAII A° UT SUPRA. NON OBIIT SED ABIIT & REVERTI DEBET. I.B.:DD."

This is for (John) Barnston * D.D. a Canon resident of the Cathedrall Church of Sarum.¹

In the Chancell, in a rundle, "PP." and around it, "Qui sperat in Deo liberabitur." [No. 480.]² Also an inscription of Susan Tisdale, wife of the Vicar; she dyed 1650.³

* Vulgarly so called, but the true name is Barnardyston.

Knight Sir Philip Boyde, in 1483; engraved in Dugdale's "Warwickshire," second edition, p. 110. Near Everley is the finely elevated Earthwork called Cidbury Camp: an outlying chalk hill capped with a bed of tertiary flint pebbles. Sir R. C. Hoare gives a plan of the Camp and an account of Barrows around Everley, in "Ancient Wilts," I., 180.

¹ John Barnston (Barnardiston) D.D., born of an ancient Cheshire family, and Chaplain to Chancellor Egerton, founded a Hebrew Lecture in Brasenose College, Oxon., of which he was a member. He is mentioned in D. Lloyd's "Memoirs." He was instituted Rector of Everley 1598, and buried in Salisbury Cathedral, where is a similar brief inscription, "Mutavit sæcula, non obiit." Mary his wife was also buried there 6th July 1625. In Everley Parish Register are three remonstrances signed "John Barnstone, Rector 9th Sept. 1610:" "Thomas Ernle, Rector 25th December, 1667;" and "A. Lemoine, Rector, 16th May, 1755;" against an ancient "heathenish custom" to which they were subject, (though from what origin none of them could find out), of being obliged to entertain the "ruder sort of people with bread, cheese and ale, after Evening Prayer on Christmas Day." "Sure I am," says Mr. Ernle, "it is of evil report, and no man can imagine into what rudeness in tract of time it may degenerate. It were to be wished it were layd in the dust and utterly forgotten." The same Rector has also recorded a very angry Memorandum concerning one William Eastman "commonly called 'Tinker,' but by trade a blacksmith, who was thrust into the Rectory for five years during the military reign of Cromwell." In Sir R. C. Hoare's work, the Latin of this is incorrectly printed: and by mistake the date of 1677 is given, instead of 1617, for the marriage of Robert Abbot, Bishop of Sarum. Also at p. 12, the extract from the Register, following John Wallis, really refers to Dr. Abraham Lemoine. The Dr. published "A treatise on Miracles," against Bolingbroke. He was buried at Paddington 13th January, 1757.

On another brass is "Hic jacet Dñus Johes Neet" (printed Rut by Sir R. C. Hoare) "quondam Rector ecclie de Everle, qui obiit V. die mens. Julii A.D. MCCCCXXIX. Cujus animæ propicietur Deus, Amen." A third to "Mary wife of John Samwell of Lavington, and daughter of William Prater of this parish: æt. 28, deceased 7 Oct. 1671."

Of the old church of St. Peter which stood at East Everley, and of the present one at West Everley built in 1813—14 by Francis Dugdale Astley Esq., there are views in Sir R. C. Hoare's work. The Patronage, till the Dissolution, was in the gift of the Abbot of Wherwell: then of Thomas Wriothesley, Earl of Southampton: now, of the Astley family.

¹ The parish lies partly in the Hundred of Everley, partly in Kingsbridge. It is sometimes called in Records, Worston or Werston: in Sarum Registers Elingdon Wroughton. The most ancient name appears to be Ellan-dun, "Hill of Ella." On some plain "sub monte Ellæ," Egbert King of Wessex overthrew Beornwulf King of Mercia in A.D. 823. Some topographers suppose Ellandun, the scene of this battle, to have been Wilton: but Mr. Offer finds no authority for this and places the battle here. [Hoare's "B. and D.," 57, 59]. A Manor here belonged at the Conquest to the Monks of St. Swithun of Winchester. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester have one now. The Rectory has been for some centuries a Sinecure, in the gift of the Bishop of Winchester. The Monks of St. Briac had in 1291 a small pension out of it. The Vicarage was in the gift of the Bishop of Winton: in 1852 by Order in Council it was transferred to the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol. The Church, originally Norman, is dedicated to St. John and St. Helen. Some late repairs brought to light on a pillar behind the pulpit, a fresco painting of a mitred Abbot, with scrip, pastoral staff, &c. Some particulars of the tenure of hamlets in Wroughton under the Barony of Castle Combe are in "Wilts Archæol. Mag.," II., 278. Sir W. Codrington has now an estate here.

In Over-Wroughton, John Torney, and afterwards the Abbey of Tewkesbury, had an estate held under the Barony of Castle Combe. [See "History of Castle Combe," 84.] In 32 Hen. VIII. there was a grant of church land by the Crown to William Richmond alias Webbe. In 1400 a manor here belonged to Sir John Roche of Bromham: in 1475 to his successors the Bayntons. They had also lands in Nether Wroughton, probably by marriage with the heiress of Daundelye who held lands here in Edw. I. under the Bishop of Winchester. [Hundred Rolls]. George and Alice Wroughton were living at Overtown 1565. T. Powell 1660. William Sadler who died 1600 had half the Manor of Over-Wroughton.

At COTSTOWE lands were given by the third Walter Dunstanville of Castle Combe to Stanley Abbey near Chippenham. Bradenstoke Abbey also had lands at a place of this name. In 2 Hen. IV. Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick had an estate of this name in Wilts.

At WICKLESCOT, the Nuns of Lacock had an estate by gift of Katharine Lovell which at the Dissolution was granted to John Goddard. ["History of Lacock," 325].

¹ SALTHORPE. The succession of landowners appears to have been thus. In Richard I., Eustace de Balliol. In Edw. I., under the Barony of Castle Combe, the Abbot of Stanley and Godfrey Bluet. In 1370, Sir Edmund Everard, Kt. [This name occurs in Aubrey's extract from the "Legier Book of Mortimer:" it was only the Legier Book and not the estate that belonged to Mortimer Earl of March]. In 1382, Robert Loundres. In 1404, Lovell. William Sadler 1600, leaving Robert his son and heir. Sir Thomas Bennet 1670. His grand-daughter Martha, an heiress, married Peter Legh Esq. Mr. Legh had two daughters: Harriet the wife of — Atherton, and Elizabeth who married first, Anthony James Keck, second, William Bathurst Pye who took the name of Bennet. Mr. Keck's daughter Elizabeth Ann Legh Keck married Thomas Calley Esq. of Burderop. Lands at Salthorp belonging to the Charter House, London, are stated to have been bought from Lord Compton by Sutton the Founder. ["Hearne's C. H." 294].

² ELCOMBE: formerly a Park: belonged in 1286 (15 Edw. I.) to the Lords Lovell of Titchmarsh, owners of many estates in this part of Wilts, as at Wanborough, Wicklescote, &c. In 1335 the Priory of Marlborough, in 1361, John Brymore, and the Duke of Lancaster, had some interest here. In 1535 some rents that had belonged to a Priory, belonged to Eton College. There was a Chantry Chapel of St. Mary in the patronage of the Lovells: the last presentation was that of John Potter 1448. Being forfeited by Lord Lovell after the battle of Bosworth, Elcombe was granted by the Crown, 6 Hen. VIII, to Sir William Compton (ancestor of Lord Northampton) and Werburge (Brereton) his wife. By his grandson Henry first Baron Compton it was sold to Thomas Sutton, founder of the Charter House, London.

particulars are obtained from an account printed by Sir Thomas Phillipps. He appears to have been of a Nottinghamshire family. His wife was Elizabeth daughter of Henry Martyn of Upham in Aldbourne, Wilts: they had 1. Henry, Rector of Stretham, and Prebendary of Ely, who married a sister of Sir Christopher Wren: and founded three Exhibitions at Magdalen College, Oxon: and three at Jesus College, Cambridge. He died 1679. 2. Samuel D.D. Rector of Bingham, Notts., where he was buried 1688: his wife was daughter of John Boughton of Lipperton, in Kent. 3. Oliver, M.B. Oxon. 4. Jane, wife of Timothy Long son of John Long of Netheravon: by whom she was mother of Col. Samuel Long distinguished in the History of Jamaica. The Vicar died in June 1641. His Will written in a tone of piety and humility was proved at Sarum 24th November 1642. It consists of simple bequests of books of Divinity to his children: and twenty shillings to the poor of the parish of Wroughton: "and would doe more if I were able to spare it:" but "I have little to bestow, for I never sought great things for myselfe."

There is also a brass plate to William Sadler 1588 and Christina his wife 1633, with some verses, and the initials of the writer, R. S. Likewise some memorials of the Codrington family.

In 1658, 10th August, Mr. Stubbs, "Minister of Wroughton," was reprimanded by William Blissett, chairman of the Commissioners for ejecting "scandalous Ministers." His offence was that of brawling and quarrelling with his neighbours, scoffing and reviling professors of godliness.

BEDWYN MAGNA.

BEDWYN hath its denomination from the great Barrow there, which is of chalk: as much as to say, The White Barrow or Sepulchre: according to the Epigram of J. Owen,

Angli Bed lectum vocitant, Cambrique sepulchrum;
Lectus enim tumuli, mortis imago sopor. [Mon. Brit.]²

¹ Anciently "Cheneward's Stone." The Lordship of the Hundred belonged to the Earls Marshal, temp. Hen. III.; and descended, like the Burgh of Bedwyn, to the Staffords. In 1783 it was purchased from the Earl of Pembroke by the Earl of Ailesbury.

² "Bedd" (pronounced Beth, the th being sounded hard as in thou), is Welsh for sepulchre: "Wyn" or "Gwyn" is, white: and when used to denote a place, also implies a certain dignity belonging to it. This derivation gives a British name, which is very uncommon in Wiltshire. There is no large barrow now to be seen. Stukeley's name Leucomagus, as an equivalent, is unmeaning. The name is Bedan-heafod (head of the graves) in the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, (and is still popularly pronounced Bedan.) Here was a battle in A.D. 674 (Turner's "Anglo-Saxons.")

By the Will of King Alfred, his land at "Bedewinda" and at "Pefesigge" (Pewsey) was given to his eldest son Edward, A.D. 900; and in A.D. 968 his great grandson King Edgar gave 72 "cassates" of land here, with others at "Burgbeche" (Burbage) and Hurstbourn, to Abingdon Abbey. These were all violently taken from the Monastery, but again restored by Ethelred A.D. 993. ["Chron. of A. Abbey," p. 315, 335, 367.]

The Hundred Rolls for Wilts say that the "Burrough" of Bedwyn (including both Great and Little Bedwyn) was Royal demesne of the first Norman Kings of England, until Hen. I. bestowed it, with the Manor of Westcombe (now Wexcombe), upon John (called from his Office) Marshal, paying yearly to the Crown an "alba firma," or Fee Farm Rent of "white money," of £32 0s. 19d. John was father of William Marshal Sen. Earl of Pembroke. The son of the latter, known as William the Earl Marshal Jun., married Lady Eleanor Plantagenet sister of King Hen. III. He died 1231. In 1238 she married secondly Simon de Montfort the Great Earl of Leicester who, jure uxoris, held the Borough and Manor by the same rent. In 1274 they were in dower to the Countess Eleanor his widow. But an Inquisition states that so early as Hen. III., Wm. Marshal, Earl of Pembroke, held lands at Bedwyn and Wexcombe, part of the inheritance of his wife Alice, sister of Beaumont an older Earl of Leicester, and afterwards wife of Simon de Montfort, father of the great Earl of that name.

In 1295 Bedwyn "Borough" and Wexcombe were held, at his death, by Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester and Hertford who had married Joan of Acre daughter of King Edw. I. The last Gilbert de Clare Earl of Gloucester, died 1313 and his widow Matilda (de Burgh) held them, together with the Hundred of Kinwardstone, in 1315, (Nom. Vill.). By Margaret, Gilbert's sister and coheirress, Bedwyn Borough and Wexcombe passed to her husband Hugh Audley created Earl of Gloucester and by his daughter and heiress Margaret to Ralph Lord Stafford who died 1372. Perhaps it was under the Staffords that John Kerby held them at his death 1469 (I. p. M.). On the execution at Salisbury of Henry Stafford second Duke of Buckingham in 1483 they would have been, if his, forfeited to the Crown: (but they do not appear in the list of his estates). Rich. III. bestowed Bedwyn on John Howard Duke of Norfolk who was killed at Bosworth. By Hen. VIII. it was granted to his brother-in-law Sir Edward Seymour created Duke of Somerset Feb. 1547. On the death of John the fourth Duke in 1675 it passed by the marriage of his niece Lady Elizabeth Seymour to Thomas Bruce Earl of Ailesbury. In the sixth vol. of the "Wilts Archæol. Mag." p. 261, is a full account of this Parish, as well as of its Representative History until the Borough was disfranchised, by the Rev. John Ward, Rector of Wath, co. York.

¹ It was not Collegiate. There was a Church here in the reign of the Confessor. The Tithes of both Bedwyns ("de utrâque Bedewindâ"), and a mill in the town, were given by William I. to Bishop Osmund, and by him to Old Sarum Cathedral A.D. 1091. [Dugd.] Master Thomas de Wykehampton (probably a relative of Robert de Wykehampton, then Bishop of Sarum) was Parson in 1280. It was a Prebend, given after the Dissolution of Monasteries, to the Protector Somerset, and with it, the right of appointing to the Vicarage, and the exercise of archidiaconal jurisdiction which lasted to 1847. The Church (St. Mary's) is cruciform, exhibiting good specimens of Norman and later English styles. It was thoroughly restored by subscription in 1854 at an expense of about £2000: and was re-opened on Easter Monday 1855. A new Font was given by the Rev. Henry Tudway: and a stained glass window placed in the South Transept to the memory of Rear Admiral Sir Thomas Fellowes K.C.B. Many very early stone coffins were found to have been used in constructing the walls of the old church: and the oldest foundations were rudely made of unhewn blocks of Sarsen stone; the spaces being filled in with rough flints, without mortar. Even below these, skeletons quite perfect were exhumed. Some curious extracts from the Parish Registers are printed in "Collect. Top. et Gen." v. 20: with some account of the Church as it stood before its recent restoration. In Carter's "Wiltshire Churches" are two views of it, exterior and interior.

32 Edw. III. (1358): but the first important accession of property here came by marriage of Roger Seymour, who died 1420, with Maud, the heiress of William Esturmy of Wulfhale, Kt., the fourth in descent from whom was Sir John Seymour, the Protector's father. Sir John's epitaph, with that of John his eldest son, and that of Lord Beauchamp, grandson of the Protector, are the only three that seem to have been found by Aubrey. The neighbouring Priory of Easton was their burying-place, and when that House went to decay, Sir John's remains, as well probably as those of his son, were removed to Great Bedwyn. His leaden coffin, with the iron handles attached for the purpose of removal, was discovered during the repairs in 1854. The breast-plate had been taken off, and there was no appearance of any wooden coffin. Among other coffins found at the same time were those of William Earl of Hertford the restored Duke of Somerset who died 1660; Frances his wife, daughter of the Earl of Essex, 1674; and their son Henry, Lord Beauchamp, 1653, (on whose plate were still left the seeds and stems of a bunch of rosemary and other flowers,) and William third Duke of Somerset, 1671.

(William, the third) Duke of Somerset lies interred in the very middle of this chancell; he was buried on Wednesday, the 20th day of Dec. 1671, sans memorial.

Memd. In this parish was born the famous Phisitian, Dr. Thomas Willis, the 27 day of January, Ao. Dni. 1621. His father was steward to Sir Walter Smyth of this place.¹ This from the Dr.'s owne mouth.²

Edward Seymour, created Lord Beauchamp 1609, son and heir of Edward Earl of Hertford, died in his father's lifetime at Wick, below Martinsall Hill, and was buried at Great Bedwyn, 21st July, 1612 (see Bedwyn Reg.). His mother was Lady Catherine, sister of Lady Jane Grey, daughter of Henry, Duke of Suffolk. By marrying without the Queen's consent, his father the Earl of Hertford had greatly offended Elizabeth. In consequence, he had to pay a fine of £5000, and was imprisoned nine years in the Tower, where his son the above Lord Beauchamp was born.

Lady Southwell, one of the eye-witnesses of Elizabeth's death-bed, says that among others proposed to the Queen to be her successor, was the Lord Beauchamp, in right of his mother (as one of the heirs of the Duchess of Suffolk, King Henry the Eighth's sister). Elizabeth, upon hearing his name, roused herself and said angrily, "I will have no rascal's son in my seat, but one worthy to be a king."

² Dr. Thomas Willis's parents were buried, Thomas 1643 and Rachel 1631, at Ferry Hinksey, near Oxford. The Doctor was baptized at Great Bedwyn 14th Feb., 1620; and was of Oxford University, and a good writer in Latin. His works in two vols. 4to. are said to abound in chymical reveries, but to contain some curious things. He married Mary daughter of Dr. Fell, Dean of Christ Church. Browne Willis the Antiquary, his grandson, often visited the house at Bedwyn in which his grandfather was born. It stood in Farm Lane at the N.E. end of the town. See "Gent. Mag." 1798, p. 1013. There is a caustic account of the Doctor, and of his grandson, in "Origines Divisianæ," p. 30. Also two Latin poems to his honour in "Musæ Anglicanæ," WULFALL.

About a mile from hence eastward is Wulfall, the ancient seate of the Sturmeys, which house has been much bigger, and great part pulled downe within these 10 yeares, to build the house of Tottenham Parke. I remember a long gallery. It was never but a timber-house, v. Camden.¹ Here is a very long barne of . . . bays, and 3 porches of timber, and thatcht: in this barne, then, 1536, hung with tapistry, was the wedding kept for Queen Jane.² Hard by is which is a most parkely ground and romancy pleasant place; several walkes, of great length, of trees planted. Here the Duke of Somerset hath his best seate, which is now, 1672, to be made a compleat new pile of good architecture.³ Both

I. 38: and a memoir and portrait by George Vertue in "Houbraken's Heads," p. 119, with the Arms, A fess between three lions rampant, within a bordure bezanty. A note to the entry of the Doctor's baptism in Great Bedwyn register says, "He was the most famous physician in the world in his time; and dying Nov. 11, 1675 in his 54th year was buried in Westminster Abbey." Henry Jenner, Vicar here, who died 1798, was elder brother of another no less famous physician, Dr. Edw. Jenner, the founder of Vaccination.

³ In the year 1571, on the death of William, third Duke of Somerset s. p., the estates passed to his sister Lady Elizabeth, who married the Earl of Ailesbury. The Dukes of Somerset of the elder line which then succeeded, had no interest here.

The first House, built out of the materials of Wulfall, was injured in the Civil Wars, and as Aubrey states, was about to be restored in 1672. A new house was built in 1717, erected partly after a design of the Earl of Burlington. Additions were made in 1722, and again by the late Earl of Ailesbury. It is now in course of completion. In Gough's "Camden" (i. 158) this place is said to have belonged to the Despensers, but he confounds it with Tockenham near Wotton Bassett. Tottenham Park now includes Fosbury (Forest-bury) Manor purchased 1655 by the Marquis of Hertford, from Henry Skilling Esq. Bagden (now Savernake Lodge) was obtained in exchange with Col. Rolt in 1765 by Thomas Earl of Ailesbury. His Lordship made very large additions to the family estates in this neighbourhood. In 1783 he purchased from Lord Pembroke Southgrove woods and a property at Bedwyn Brail: in 1786 East Grafton Manor from Lady Aylesford, daughter of Charles 6th Duke of Somerset: Wilton and West Bedwyn Manor from Benjamin Bond Hopkins Esq. in 1787: an estate (formerly Bishop Lowth's) at Collingbourne Ducis in 1805: the Castle (now the College) at Marlborough, from the Duke of Rutland in 1779; and St. Margaret's Farm there, from the Duke of Marlborough in 1821.

in the Parish of Bedwyn Magna.¹

² The one name of Bedwyn anciently included both West and East, (now, Great and Little) Bedwyn. In 1405 a church and 4234 acres were severed, and made a distinct Vicarage, with a portion of the tithes of the Prebend. See "Coll. Top. and Gen." v. 36, 136. East or (Little) Bedwyn was held in 1475 of the King by the Russells of Dyrham co. Gloucester. In 1324 Sir Theobald Russell having trespassed while hunting within the limits of Savernake Forest, his wood at East Bedwyn was taken into the King's hands till satisfaction should be made. (Rot. Claus. 17 Ed. II.) Other names here were Musard, 1330; Scot, 1389, and Rok 1427, each holding a half manor jure Braybroke, under Stafford, Duke of Buckingham: John Sydele 1427, Nicholas Wotton 1452, and John Stapulhill 1436. In 13 Hen. VIII. there was a grant to Sir Edward Darell of manors at Wexcombe, Burbage-Savage, West Bedwyn and Orcheston.

At KNOWLE field were found in a barrow, a number of urns to the quantity of 227 gallons "filled with black jelly, smelling of spices, and quivering in the spades," (Gough's "Camd. I. 159.) There is a desecrated Chapel here.

CHISBURY Castle is the name of a large oval Earthwork on a high hill about a mile N.W. of Great Bedwyn: enclosing within ramparts partly double, partly treble, (but these now almost concealed by trees), an area of 15 acres. From the discovery of black ashes, pottery and charred wood under the inner rampart, Sir R. C. Hoare thinks it was originally British, enlarged by the Saxons. It is supposed to take its name from Cissa, an early Anglo-Saxon governor of Wessex. The circuit is 1012 yards: depth of the vallum 45 feet. It is traversed by a road North and South. The Wansdyke, which forms in some places a boundary between the two Bedwyns, runs near, but apparently has no connexion with it.

Chisbury Manor belonged in 1086 to Gilbert de Breteville: in temp. John to the family of Columbars (a collateral branch of the Barons Columbars extinct): from c. 1284 to c. 1540 to the eldest line of the great House of Cobham of Kent. (See above p. 164.) Then to Read of Yate co. Gloucester, until 1602 when it was sold with its Tithes to the Earl of Hertford, and thence

In the Church here, nihil antiquitatis; the windowes seem to be about the time of Hen. 4. The soyle is brown sand, and very naturall for turnips, with which commodity many parts are furnished. Q. how long turnips have been sown here; for my uncle, Alderman James, of Bristowe, now near 80, remembers when he was a boy that all the turnips there came from Wales, and now none come thence, and the red sand about Bristowe breeds a better, and a bigger turnip.²

has come to the Earl of Ailesbury. Within the Earthwork is a farm house some time (from c. 1630 to 1713) the residence of a branch of the Hungerfords, leaseholders under Lord Hertford. Near it is a Chapel, still in fair condition but used as a barn: built of flints and plastered. The windows of stone, and in the "Decorated" style. In Val. Eccl. it is called "St. Martin's." John ap Man was Priest in 1534 with £2 13s. 4d. per annum. The Advowson belonged in 1400 to the Cobhams. But at the Dissolution, in a grant to C. Willoughby, the chapel is described as part of the possessions of the late Priory of St. Denis, near Southampton. It has since followed the descent of the manor.

The Church (now All Saints) was in the hands of a Priest, Vitalis, at the Conquest. It was given by Hen. I. to Old Sarum Cathedral: and with Hurstborne (Hants) became a Prebend. Daniel Whitby, the Commentator, held it in 1668—1698. The Vicarage was in the gift and under the jurisdiction of the Prebendary. Lord Ailesbury has the Rectorial Tithes. The present church was consecrated 7th September 1854.

² The turnips of Burbage left a pleasant taste on Aubrey's palate. "They are the best that ever I did eat. They are sent for far and near. They are not tough and stringy like other turnips, but cutt like marmalad. Pease also excellent." Nat. Hist. of Wilts, 36.

³ Easton near Burbage is a parish per se. Here was a Priory of the Holy Trinity, founded some say, c. 1240 (Hen. III.) by Stephen, Archdeacon of Sarum, for the redemption of captives. The Esturmy and Seymour families were Patrons, the former of whom held lands here in 3 Edward I. under the Bishop of Hereford. The Priory estates lay, here, at Froxfield, and Fighelden. It had the Churches of Easton, of Stapleford (by gift of John Bengier 24 Hen. VI.), Tidcombe-Hussey, and Froxfield: also lands at Milton and East Grafton, the latter given by Sir Robert Hungerford, 1336, to maintain a Chantry Priest and Obit for his wife Geva, his friends and himself. At the time of this foundation there were six Brethren; five being in Orders and one a Layman. Brother Edmund then Head of the House is called "Minister," and the Deed is dated at Crofton. In 1363 Robert Englonde was Prior; died 1375. Among the Rawlinson MSS. in Bodleian Library, Oxon, (B. 142) is a volume of "Letters of Robert (Wyvill) Bishop of Sarum relating to the Hospital of Holy Trinity of Eston A.D. 1368." In 1410 John Hakeleston was Prior; and the last was Roger Marshal. The Priory was then granted, together with other lands here belonging to St. Margaret's Priory at Marlborough, to the Seymours, who seem to have occasionally resided here: for in the British Museum (Add. MS.5496) there are many letters to and from the Earl of Hertford "at his house at Easton." The site is traditionally pointed out. In "Coll. Top. and Gen." v. 39, it is stated by Rev. John Ward that "Easton is a Royal Donative in the sole jurisdiction of the Marquis of Ailesbury, who appoints the Minister, and is the principal proprietor. The Registers commence in 1580, at which time the old Priory Church was still in existence." It was sometimes called "Easton Royal." The present church was built in 1591 by Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford, son of the Protector Duke of Somerset.

MERE HUNDRED.

MAYDEN-BRADLEY.

THERE was a handsome well-built house, built by Sir Henry Ludlowe¹ or his ancestors, now dilapidated since the late warres.
In the Chancell, over the seate that was Sir Henry Ludlowe's, are, in wood, painted, these two coates:

1. [Pl. xxxiv. No. 496] MARGARET, VISCOUNTESS HOWARD DE BINDON. Ask Mr. Wyche the crest, which I have forgott. Over the coat, a Viscountess's Coronet. Twelve quarterings. [1. MANNING. 2. BARWISE? 3. BROCKHILL. 4. PETLEY. 5. TROUMER. 6. BRAMPTON. 7. TROUMER? 8. — 9. ARDEN. 10. PHILIPOTT. 11. BERNAS? 12. DYMOKE.]
2. [No. 497] EDMUND LUDLOW, Knight. Six quarterings. [1. LUDLOW of Shropshire. 2. RYMER. 3. BULSTRODE. 4. MOORE. 5. COKER. 6. LUDLOW.]

The crest is something like a Lion ramp. Sable.

They bury at Hill Deverill. No monument of them in this church. Only, on free-stone:

"Here lieth the body of FRANCES LUDLOWE, sixth daughter of Sir Henry Ludlowe Knt. who dyed Aprill the 24th An. Dni. 1631, . . . Ætatis.

"Here lieth the body of ANNE LUDLOWE, the daughter of Thomas Ludlowe, squire, who dyed the 2d day of December, Anno Dni, 166. .

A shield nearly similar to Sir Edmund's is in Hoare's History of "Mere" p. 177: and the Pedigree of Ludlow in "Heytesbury," pp. 11 and 15; in which however the names of Frances and Anne, buried at Maiden Bradley, do not occur.

Col. Edm. Ludlowe, that kept Wardour Castle for the Parliament, and so resolutely defended it, was eldest sonne of Sir Henry by Dame Margaret aforesaid. They say he was born here, and that he is now, 1671, 55 yeares of age. Vile the Register for his Nativity, or if possible to gett his Geniture for the sake of Astrology, to see what rugged aspects of Saturn or Mars he is under.—Apocalyptically mad.¹

“Here lies interred the body of MRS. ELIZABETH REDDICH, late wife of William Reddich, Gent.,² who departed this life the 8th day of Oct. 1668.”

Mem. The place where Mr. lives, called Kate or Kate's-bench, where Katharine of the leprous sisters Bassets (read, “Bisets”) used to sitt.³

His retirement, with others of his party, to Vevay on the Lake of Geneva is well known. In addition to the account of his residence there, already published in Hoare's “Heytesbury,” p. 25, and elsewhere, some new particulars are supplied by H. L. Long Esq. who was permitted to examine the archives of Vevay, (“Archæologia,” vol. xxxv. p. 114). On leaving the town for a temporary residence in England 25th July 1689, Ludlow wrote a letter in French to the authorities, stating that he was about to revisit his native country “to strengthen the hands of our Gideon, to deliver ourselves out of the house of bondage, and demolish the Altar of Baal.”

The following Latin inscription was formerly over Ludlow's house at Vevay, but is now at Heywood House near Westbury in this county: “OMNE SOLUM FORTI PATRIA, QUIA PATRIS, 1686,” (literally, “Every land is a home to a brave man, because it is his Father's”). The first four words are taken from Ovid (Fasti, i. 493) who had translated them from a fragment of Euripides. Plato (quoted in Lily's Euphues) has a similar sentiment: “Every place is a country to a wise man, and all parts a palace to a quiet mind.” The two additional words “Quia Patris” have often been misunderstood, (as in Hoare's “Heytesbury,” p. 26). They do not refer to the General's natural father, but to the ALMIGHTY: and the meaning of the whole inscription is, in the late Lord Macaulay's words, (“History of England,” iii. 509) “To whom God is a father, every land is a father-land.”

² The pedigree of Redich of Maiden Bradley is in “Wilts Visit.,” 1623. See also Ashmole's “Berks.”

³ The tradition alluded to was, and is, that the Religious House for female lepers at this place, a fragment of which still remains, was founded by two Ladies, one of whom, being herself a sufferer from that malady, resorted for solace to a neighbouring hill, whence to enjoy the prospect: that her name was Katharine and (“ex re nomen habet”) this her bench. But the Founder of Maiden Bradley Priory was a man: Manser or Manasseh Biset, who c. A.D. 1154 endowed it as a Hospital with the Manor of Bradley. About a hundred years afterwards, viz. c. 1250, his estate at Kidderminster in Worcestershire being divided between two coheiresses of his descendant John Biset, the husband of one of them, John de Rivers, added to the endowment a part of his wife's lands at Kidderminster. Nor was Katharine the name of either of the coheiresses. But the place may have been the favourite resort of some of the unfortunate maidens of the House; unless the name be merely a corruption of Gate-bench.

There is an engraving of Maiden Bradley Church in "Gent. Mag.," 1816, p. 393. The family of Mompesson of Corton in Boyton lived sometime in this parish. See Pedigree, Hoare's "Heytesbury," 219.

² The Manor of Mere, ancient demesne of the Crown, was given by Hen. III. in A.D. 1243, to his brother Richard, Earl of Cornwall. It was afterwards held by other persons: all of whom, with the short exception of Gaveston the favourite of Edw. II., were connected with Blood Royal. Since the time of the Black Prince, who was created first, Duke of Cornwall and afterwards Prince of Wales, (when the Duchy merged in the Principality), Mere has always been, and still is, associated with the heir apparent to the Crown. Of the Castle which stood upon an outlying chalk hill a little distance from the town nothing is left. In the reign of Edw. I. the Abbot of Scone in Scotland was imprisoned here. He was conducted as a rebel and traitor by the Sheriff of Wilts from Winchester, and delivered over to be kept in chains by Richard de Chiselden Seneschal of Mere. The reader will find the history of Mere in Sir R. C. Hoare's "Mod. Wilts," vol. i. pp. 1, 142, 160: and at pp. 205—226, a very long but curious and minute account of the annual receipts, expenditure and general management of Mere Castle and the Earl of Cornwall's estate under the said Richard of Chiselden 24th and 25th Edw. I. (1296—7). The Earl (Edmund Plantagenet) resided at Berkhamstead, Herts, and his rents were carried to him in hard money, the clerk's journey to and fro occupying nine to thirteen days. Mere Castle had six towers covered with lead. One was called "The Countess's;" (his wife Margaret Clare having been separated from him and "decreed to lead an unmarried life," probably lived here); and others, the "Northern, Eastern," &c. It had an outer and inner gate: a very deep well, the chain of which appears to have been continually breaking: a Chapel and a Priest with 50s. a year to say Mass for the soul of the Earl's mother Sanchia Berenger. Its officers were a constable, a warder for day and a watchman for night. In the year in which the account was taken, the armoury and engines for casting missiles were ordered to be put in repair, as some trouble was expected; the Barons, headed by Bohun and Bigod, having refused to serve the King in any war beyond sea. Many curious details relating to the farming customs and domestic processes of the day (more than 550 years ago) are also given in this document.

¹ The Arms of “Kymer,” Three wolves within a border, are stated by Sir R. C. Hoare (p. 11) to be on one of these seats. This must have been Gilbert Kymer, Dean of Sarum 1449—63, and as such, Rector of Mere. He had been Dean of Wimborne Minster, Principal of Hart Hall, and Chancellor of Oxford. He was also Physician to King Henry VI. and Humphrey Duke of Gloucester, and Author of “Dietarium Salutis.” An order addressed to him as “Master Dean of Salisbury, notable, expert and proved in the Craft of Medicine,” is printed in “Gent. Mag.” 1788, p. 943. See also “Hutch. Dorset,” ii, 79. His figure in a gown, with an inscription, is in a window of the South cross aisle in Salisbury Cathedral. The Rectory of Mere was a Peculiar of the Deanery. A list of vicars from the Dean's Register is printed by Sir R. C. Hoare, p. 168. Also (p. 142) a curious inventory of the Goods of the Church in 1220, William de Wanda, Dean. An engraving of the Rood Screen is in “Gent. Mag.” 1832, pt. i. One of the ancient doors of the Church has some good iron-work.

On a table against the wall [No. 522] CHAFYN as before, quartering [ERLEGH].

In the South aisle window [No. 523, ROET ?]

In the South windows of the middle aisle, 1. PRINCE OF WALES [No. 524]. 2. — ? impaling CARANT [No. 525]. 3. Another outline, of 9 quarterings [No. 526] I cannot discern, this dim weather. The first seems to be TOUCHET. On an escutcheon of pretence, STOURTON.¹

It ought not to be forgotten that the reverend and learned Divine, Mr. Francis bling Gournay, and Cantilupe, both names connected with the Pedigree of Zouche. A Zouche, whose family had been Lords of Castle Cary, was holder of Mere Park under the Crown temp. Eliz. The shields as described by Aubrey do not exactly correspond with those of Gournay and Cantilupe, but as he was there "on a dim day," he may not have copied them quite accurately.

Potter, B.D., Rector of Kilmington, in Co. Somerset, 1675, quondam a Commoner of Trinity College in Oxford, Author of the "Interpretation of the Number 666," which is translated into French, High Dutch, Low Dutch, and Latin; a rare inventor of machines, and my singular good friend, was born here in the Vicaridge house, his father being Vicar here, and Rector of Kilmington.¹

STOURTON.²

The Parish of Stourton, the Lord's house, and three of the six springs in the Park, are all in the county of Wiltshire; whereas Mr. Camden has put them all in Somersetshire. These fountaines, I am sure those within the Park pale, are curbed with pierced cylinders of freestone, like chimney tunnes, the diameter of the concave being eighteen inches. [Pl. xxxvi. No. 530.]

Note. That the coate of the Lord Stourton is S. a bend Or. between 6 fountains [Pl. xxxv. No. 528], which allude to these six springs, being the head of the River Stour which runns to Blandford, &c. I believe anciently 'twas only Sable, a bend Or. [Pl. xxxvi. No. 529.]

The Park is large, but bald for timber trees, only some old stagge-headed trees remayning. This tract of country was heretofore all horrid and woody; it bordereth on the Forests of Bruton and Gillingham.

¹ Anthony Wood's account of Mr. Francis Potter, (Ath: Oxon: ii. 613) reprinted in Hoare's "Mere," p. 158 was evidently supplied by Aubrey, who in his Lives of Eminent Men, ("Letters from the Bodleian," ii. 496) has dwelt at considerable length upon this brilliant mechanical genius hidden under the bushel of Kilmington Parsonage. "'Twas pity," he says, "that such a delicate inventive witt should be staked in an obscure corner, from whence men rarely emerge to higher preferment, but contract a moss on them, like an old pale in an orchard, for want of ingeniose conversation, which is a great want even to the deepest thinking men." Mr. Potter was born 1594, and died about 1678. His book was published at Oxford in 4to. 1642. Pepys mentions it in his "Memoirs," (February 18th 1665—6, and 4th and 10th November 1666,) "It pleased him mightily. He liked it all along: but the close most excellent: and, whether right or wrong, mighty ingenious." There is a copy in the British Museum Library.

² Modern Stourton is described by its then owner Sir R. C. Hoare in his "History of Mere," Hundred," (Mod. Wilts, vol. i.) and a plan of the sources of the Stour is given in the same work at p. 86. The park wall dividing the six springs was taken down by Sir Richard.

In the Parke on a hill, is the Toft, they say, of the Castle of Stourton: nothing now remayning but trenches; after this figure [No. 531].

(Old Stourton House.)¹

Stourton House as it appears from the South [Pl. xxxvii. No. 548].

The house is of gothique building, and standeth on a great deal of ground, and this and Farleigh Castle are the two howses that are almost entirely the same as they were in the time of the old English Barons.

Here is a great open-roofed hall, and an extraordinary large and high open-roofed kitchen.

In the Hall of Stourton house.

In the glasse windowes are several single scutcheons of Stourton [as in No. 528].

In the Court over the Parlour windowe is, in stone, this quartered scutcheon [No. 532]: STOURTON as before, quartering, 1. a cross engrailed [WILLOUGHBY]. 2. an inescutcheon within an orle of 8 martlets (CHEDIOCK.)

Another shield STOURTON and DERBY.²

In the buttrey is preserved a huge and monstrous bone, which the tradition of the howse would have to be of a mighty man or rather gyant, of this Family: it is two foote long and inches about. I had these verses there upon it,

“In Sturtoni satrapæ admirandæ magnitudinis
Coxam gentilitiâ sepulturâ Monasterii Glassenburiensis inventam asservatamque antiquitatis et admirationis ergo.

Epigramma.

Herculeam veteres molem cecinere poetæ
Corpus et immensum, prodigiumque pedis.

¹ For Leland's account of Old Stourton House, every trace of which, except the site, is gone, see "Wilts Archæol. Mag." I. 194. Aubrey ("Nat. Hist. of Wilts.," p. 101) says "It was little considerable as to the architecture." His rude sketch is copied in Hoare's "Frustfield." p. 7.

² Aubrey omitted to describe the shield called "Derby." Charles Lord Stourton (who died 1557) married Ann daughter of Edward Stanley, Earl of Derby: and there was a Rector of Stourton named Darby, 1666.

Saxonici Herois coxam mirando nepotes
Anglia quos genuit, nunc didicere, viros.
Talia si nostro florerent corpora seculo,
Sectarum nusquam monstra nocere putem."

The knobbes at the end of this bone are about the bignesse of two fists of a good substantial man, which exceeds the proportion of human thigh bones; and besides they are not of the figure or shape of a human bone. There was such a kind of bone hung up in a chaine in the Cloyster of Alderman-bury church-yard, before the conflagration of London, which bone is now at the King's howse in Greenwyche. Mr. Camden somewhere in his Britannia, I think Essex, makes mention of such bones; which he believes to be fish's bones, mistaken for men's. But why might they not be Elephant's bones? for the Romans brought Elephants into Britaine.

In the Chappell, in the howse, the pavement is of brick annealed or painted with their coate, and Rebus "W.S. a tower & a ton Or." [No. 533.] N.B. These enamelled bricks have not been used these last hundred yeares. The old paving at our Lady's Church at Sarum is so; and at Gloucester excellent; and the like in other places. 'Tis pity it is not revived and improved—Mr. Dwight may much improve it.

The Lord Stourtons were possessed of a great Estate in the West, till in Queen Marie's dayes the Lord Stourton was attainted by his murthring of Hartgill his steward, whom he killed and buried in his cellar; for which he was hanged in a silken cord at Salisbury: as also, I thinke, in the same yeare was the Lord Hungerford. Sir Geo. Hungerford saies the Lord Hungerford was beheaded in Religion," by Robert Parsons the Jesuit, in which he informs the reader that the Stourton family adopted their device, of a Monk armed with a scourge, at the first visit of Augustine to England, B.D. 597. He might have said, with quite as much truth, that the Stourtons derived their arms from Nileus, who bore upon his shield the seven sources of the Nile, Argent and Or.

" — qui se genitum septemplíce Nilo
Argento partim, partim cœlaverat auro." (Ovid, Met. v., 187.)

— " Nileus, who vainly said he ow'd
His origin to Nile's prolific flood,
Who on his shield seven silver rivers bore,
His birth to witness by the name he wore."

The Stourton family adopted the crest of a Demi-Monk with a scourge from another family, Le Moine, whose heiress married Sir William Stourton c. 1398: eight centuries after Augustine.

It is stated in some of the "Peerages," that the Stourtons were "of considerable rank before the Conquest, and dictated their own terms to the Conqueror:" but of this there is no evidence in Wiltshire County History. If there was any such family in this county at the Conquest, it was not by their position or extent of property here, that they were qualified to be formidable to the Conqueror. The name is found, apparently for the first time, among Wiltshire landholders in the reign of Edw. I., when a Nicholas Stourton was holding one Knight's fee here, under the Lovells of Castle Cary. It occurs no where else in Wilts at that period.

By the marriage with the heiress of Le Moine above-mentioned, William Stourton, Knight, obtained a large accession of property: and, following a custom common in those days, he adopted her crest. In 1426 John (created in 1448, Baron) Stourton obtained license to enclose a Park of 1000 acres. He was the first Wilts Sheriff of this family (1426—7). In 1440 he had a grant in Fee of Old Sarum, then so ruinous that it yielded no benefit to the King, to be held by fealty paying 3s. 4d. yearly to the Crown. His descendants remained till 1720 when Henry Hoare Esq. purchased Stourton, and having taken down the Old House, gave to the new one the name of of Stourhead. The Stourton Peerage is now one of the oldest in England, being one of the very few, only eighteen in the whole, whose lineal male ancestors were noblemen at the end of Queen Elizabeth's reign.

"Sturleius," mentioned in the extract from Parsons, is the family of Strelley, co. Nottingham, which Camden calls one of the oldest and most famous in that county.

the Tower and buried there; as is to be seen in the Private Act of Parliament.¹

It is to be remembered that in those dayes there were great animosities, they termed it feuds, between Lords and Lords, and Gentlemen and Knights, in all counties; and in Queen Marie's time there was a great feud between this Lord and William Herbert, the first Earl of Pembroke of that family, who was altogether a stranger in the West, and from a private gentleman and of no estate, but only a soldier of fortune, becoming a favorite of K. Hen. 8. at the dissolution of the Abbeys, in few yeares from nothing, slipt into a prodigious Estate of the Church's Lands, which brought great envy on him from this Baron of an ancient family and great paternal estate, besides the difference in religion. This Lord Stourton aforesayd was a person of great spirit and courage, and kept in his retinue the stoutest fellowes he could hear of. Amongst others he heard of one Hartgill, a mighty stout fellowe who had lately killed a man, who was recommended to his Lordship for his valour; who when he came into his family, the Lord Stourton gave the next Sunday ten groates to the Priest of the Parish to say a Masse for him at Church, for the expiation of Hartgill's sin in killing the man. A surly, dogged, crosse fellowe it seems he was; who, at last, when his Lordship had advanced him to be steward of his Estate, cosined his Lord of the Mannour of Kilmanton, the next parish. I thinke it was a Trust. The Lord Stourton, who also had as good a spirit, seeing that his servant Hartgill had so ensnared him in law tricks, as that he could not possibly be relieved; not being able to bear so great and ungratefull an abuse, murthered him as aforesaid. Vide Grafton's Chronicle, which speakes most fully of this story.²

² The above account judging from the style, is most likely Aubrey's own; but upon the information of his friend Mr. Potter, who gave the best colour he could to the story for the family of his neighbours. This extraordinary case is printed in Sir R. C. Hoare's "Mere," and in Phelps's "Somerset," i. 185: also in Gent. Mag. 1760, p. 87. The cause of the quarrel appears to have been the Manor of Kilmington (or as Aubrey spells it, Kil-man-ton) which immediately adjoins Stourton parish, and within the limits of which "Alfred's Tower" now stands. Kilmington had belonged to Shaftesbury Nunnery. It seems that Lord Stourton desired it, but that Hartgill anticipated him. Their dispute is often mentioned in the Council Book of Edward VI., in whose reign it began. Both parties were bound over. In Queen Mary's reign it was renewed; but the Council again interposing, the disputants agreed to live amicably. Lord Stourton however caused Hartgill's son to be waylaid and nearly murdered. For this he was imprisoned; and then condemned to pay a fine to the Hartgills. Going down to his home ostensibly for this purpose, he decoyed the father and son to meet him under pretext of paying the fine. They were then bound, carried to a field near Stourton, knocked down with clubs, their throats cut (his lordship holding the candle), and their bodies buried in a dungeon. Lord Stourton was tried in Westminster Hall, and at first refused to plead, but the Chief Justice threatening him with pressure to death, he confessed the fact, and was executed at Salisbury. His assistants were hung in chains at Mere. "To his own quality," says an old MS., "a distinction was allowed, that instead of being hanged in a common cord, a silken one was used, which must needs have been a mighty comfort to him. This is not unlike a passage in the Roman History about Galba: who, being petitioned by a condemned knight that he might not suffer like a common malefactor, the Emperor commanded the gallows to be finely painted and coloured that it might be answerable to his dignity." Bp. Burnet (Hist. of Reform. iii. 44) having at first stated that Queen Mary had felt herself obliged to let the sentence be carried out, though very much against her private wishes on account of Lord Stourton being of her religion, says afterwards, that, living in Wiltshire, he (the Bishop of Salisbury) had gathered from the traditions of the county another version, viz., that the Queen had actually sent down a reprieve, but that Lord Pembroke, by locking his gates contrived to evade the messenger for the night, and that in the morning when the bearer of the reprieve returned to Wilton, Lord Pembroke had in the meantime hastened to Salisbury to cause the original sentence to be carried into execution. Mr. Waylen (History of Marlborough, p. 219) has some remarks upon this subject.

Mem. Michaelmas 1675, the Mannour of Kilmanton was sold by Hartgill to Fox.¹

Among the class of impostors called "Abraham Men," who in Queen Elizabeth's reign told pitiful stories of the cruelties they had suffered in Bedlam, one is mentioned of the name of Stradling, a knave who pretended to have been a servant of Lord Stourton, and to have gone mad for grief at his execution: "he fell first into a deep pensiveness, and then for a year or more lost his wits. Lastly he was taken with a marvellous palsy, that shook both head and hands." [Greene's Groundwork of Coney Catching.]

¹ This "sale to — Fox" may perhaps have been only a mortgage to Sir Stephen, a great lender of money on Wiltshire estates temp. Charles II.: for Sir R. C. Hoare ("Mere," p. 157) says that the Manor of Kilmington was sold by Ferdinando Hartgill to Henry Hoare in 1735.

They were great benefactors to the Cathedrall Church of Sarum, as appears by their coate of arms every where about the Church, and in all the Prebendaries' howses. They were also great benefactors to the Abbey of Glastonbury, where yet all about the Town their scutcheons flourish in the windowes, and in the remaining part of that stately Monastery: in the Church of which most of the Family, before the Reformation, were interred. I saw their Pedigree, which is drawn from Botolph Stourton before mentioned (p. 391), who lived in the time of the Conquest, to about the beginning of King James's time. Mem. King James is derived from this family in the Pedigree; one of his Progenitors marrying to a daughter of this family about 200 yeares ago, more or less. Mem. The Lord Stourton that is now, 1674, is named Botolph, and his sonne is the nineteenth from the first Botolph inclusive. I had a great curiosity to observe that so honorable and eminent a family should not, since the Conquest, lose a generation. Compare these generations with ours and others.¹

^a I have heard one say that the issue male of this Family being all extinct, except a brother who was a White Friar, the Pope granted a dispensation of his vowe, and that he should quit his Convent, and marry to continue the line of the Family; which accordingly he did; and in such cases the brother that so departs, is to runne the gauntlet, as the soldiers term it, that is, all the Fryars put themselves into two ranks, having every one a penitential whip in his hand, and the dispensed Fryar runnes through, every one giving him a lash. (In the original MS., a pen has been drawn, probably by Aubrey himself, through this “hear say.”) Before, the crest of this Family was a Dray. Note—A crest taken according to this tradition is not so probable as that in page (391) backed by authentic history, (i.e. Robert Parsons’s story, Ed.) for the rise of that is honourable, this not so.

¹ Brook House (or Hall) is long since destroyed. It stood about three miles N.W. of Westbury on the site of the present Brook House Farm. In the Notes (by the present Editor) to "Leland's Journey through Wilts" printed in the "Wilts Archæol. Mag.," I., 183, and in Sir R. C. Hoare's "Westbury" the reader will find some account of it. During the period included within the dates of Aubrey's heraldry, it belonged to the families of Paveley, Cheyney, Willoughby de Broke, and Blount Lord Montjoy. The Paveleys are the oldest owners on record. By their coheiress it passed to Cheyney c. 1361: and by the heiress of Cheyney to Willoughby c. 1430. Robert the 1st Lord Willoughby de Broke took his title, says Dugdale, "from his residence at Broke near Westbury called from that little torrent running there." He made a new house, but part of the old House of the Paveleys was visible when Leland was here. By a grand-daughter of the first Lord Willoughby it came to Charles Blount Lord Montjoy.

¹ Camden says that "Lord Willoughby, by report Admiral, used the helme of a ship for the seal to his ring;" and Aubrey, that it had been used by Lord Willoughby de Broke temp. Edw. III. But there was no such Baron until Hen. VII.: and no Willoughby, Admiral, appears in Rapin's List. The device of a Rudder (noticed by Leland also, as prevailing in these windows) for whatsoever reason borne by the Paveleys, continued to be used here, (and on some churches, as Westbury, Edingdon, and Seend,) by their representatives, Cheney and Willoughby.

In the original MS., Aubrey's verbal description of the shields formerly at this House corresponds neither with his own drawings nor with the ascertained family history. In order therefore to prevent tediousness by a number of petty corrections, both text and drawings have been adjusted according to the best pedigrees. [See Hutchins's "Dorset," I., 291. "Coll. Top. et Gen.," VI., 335, and Nicolas's "Peerage."] The following Table may be useful in explaining the heraldry. The names printed in capital letters are those of the various heiresses whose quarterings are brought in. Figures, below names, refer to the shields.

WESTBURY.²

Is a Market, and Mayor Towne, and sends two Burghesses to Parliament.

Here is a very faire and well built Church, but the windowes lamentably spoiled by the Fanatiques.

In the Chancell, nil: only 3 signes of shields. There are very old Desks, not stalls, which looks like a chauntrey.

Near the Communion Table, is a large marble stone with this escutcheon, [Pl. xxxviii. No. 573] WADMAN impaling DREW: Crest, (No. 574: in which the demi-eagle should be Ermine and wings Gules,) and Inscription:

"Here lyeth the body of FRANCES, the second wife of JOHN WADMAN, of Brook, in the County of Wilts, Esqr., who died the 28th day of August, 1681, and left to survive her, Robert, William, and Francis Wadman: she was daughter to Robert Drew of South Broom, in the same county, Esqr.

¹ Sir Walter Blount, Knight, who died 1402, married Sanchia de Ayala, daughter of Don Diego Gomez de Toledo, by Inez de Ayala.

² The History of this parish, the materials for which were collected chiefly by Mr. R. Harris, is in Sir R. C. Hoare's "Modern Wilts: Hundred of Westbury." In 1861 the name was selected for the title of his Barony, by the Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Bethell, Lord Chancellor of England, a native of Bradford on Avon in this county.

In memory of whom this stone was laid by her son, Robert Wadman, Esqr., Executor of John Wadman his father, who died the 3rd day of October, 1688, in the 86th year of his age, and lies interred at Imber, in the foresaid county."¹

In an aisle, north of the Chancel, where nothing remains of the old glass. Tradition is that two maydes of Brook built it.² Here under a faire black marble, Mr. Bennet and his wife lye; their figures in brasse plates; his in a gowne.³

"Here lyeth the bodie of THOMAS BENNET of Westbury, Gentleman, who tooke to wife MARGARET BURITON, the eldest daughter and one of the coheires of Thomas Buriton, of Streatley, in the countie of Barkes, Esquire, which Margaret surviving her saide husbnde, hath in token of their mutuall love whilst they lived togeather, and in testimonie of her continued affection after his decease, caused this stone to be here placed to his memorie; with whom as she lived, so after her death intendeth she, by God's permission, to rest in the same grave, as this monument doth import. The said Thomas Bennet dyed the day of June, An. Dni. 1605. And the said Margaret dyed the day of An. Dni.

² The "Two Maids" may have been Alice and Joan, coheiresses (1361) of Sir John Paveley of Brook House: the former married Sir John St. Loe: the latter, Ralph Cheney, whose arms impaling his wife's (No. 577), Aubrey afterwards mentions as having disappeared from the Leversedge aisle in Westbury Church.

⁴ Sir R. C. Hoare prints this name incorrectly Burston ("Westbury," p. 16). Ashmole ("Berks," I., 38) gives the inscription on Thomas Buriton in Streatley Church: where on another monument the name is spelled Beryngton. They were from co. Hereford.

1. GIFFORD. 2. (LEVERSEDGE.)¹ 3. G. a cross engrailed Arg: in dexter quarter an annulet A. (for difference. This seems to be for another family of LEVERSEDGE.)

In a Chapelle, south of the Chancell, are left in one windowe some Rudders of ships Or; the cognizance of the Lord Willoughby of Brooke. In this Church are severall good flatt marbles, but inscriptions lost, or never there.

(Monument of JAMES LEY, EARL of MARLBOROUGH.)

In a South Chapell, where the Earle of Marleborough lies buried; in the windowe nothing; under the windowe an old nich for a monument, but ibi sedet oblivio. The said Earle lies here under a very noble monument with Corinthian pillars, and four figures, viz. the Cardinall vertues. At the top, his coate, with the quarterings as here expressed.

This Lord Treasurer was Vicar of Teffont worth £60 a year, and this maintained him at Lincoln's Inn. The Butler, or somebody, read the Prayers. Mr. Ash of Teffont has his Institution and Induction. Insert this in Teffont.²

In the Chapell, S. of the Chancell, on a large marble, is this Inscription:

"Here lieth the body of MRS. ELIZABETH IVIE, the wife of Mr. James Ivie, Vicar of Westbury,

¹ In Sir R. C. Hoare's "Westbury" there is a portrait, and Memoir of the Earl of Marlborough, at p. 35: and an engraving of his monument at p. 15. The substance of the above inscription is, that he was sixth son of Henry Ley (of Ley in Bere Ferrers, co. Devon, and afterwards) of Teffont Ewyas, Wilts: that after having been (1603) Chief Justice of the King's Bench in Ireland he became in England Attorney-General of the Court of Wards (1609) and Chief Justice of King's Bench (1620): was made by James I. (1624) Baron Ley and Lord Treasurer: and by Charles I., Earl of Marlborough and President of the Council (1626—7). He was thrice married, 1st, to Mary daughter of John Pettey of Stoke Talmage co. Oxon, by whom he had three sons and seven daughters. 2nd, Mary, daughter of Sir William Bower Knight. 3rd, Jane, daughter of (John) Lord Butler (of Bramfield). He died at Lincoln's Inn, 14th March, 1628. The Earl lived at Heywood: and had large property in Westbury an account of which is given in Hoare, p. 81. This Earldom became extinct in 1679. There is a notice of him in Nichols's "Lit. History." Pepys in his Journal mentions the "young, beautiful and rich widow of the Earl, as having remarried William Ashburnham, the Cofferer."

In Sir William Dugdale's plates of the Arms in the windows of Lincoln's Inn Chapel, are two shields of Sir James Ley's arms in which the quarterings correspond very nearly with those given in No. 579.

² The Earl was born about 1552: was entered of Brasenose College, 1569: and thence removed to Lincoln's Inn as a student. A "James Ley" was certainly instituted to the Rectory of Teffont Ewyas in 1569, and resigned it in 1576. The dates and name seem to give some colour to Aubrey's statement: but how a youth of 17 years of age could be instituted to a Rectory, and that, during the Bishoprick of John Jewell, does not seem very intelligible.

DOWN AMPNEY.

IN the Church thus:¹

In the South Crosse, in an old niche, the figure of a Lady in freestone, but sans inscription. Near to her, in blew marble, lyes a Knight crossed-legged; in his shield the charge of Villiers; On a cross 5 escallops: it is very ancient [Pl. xxxix. No. 584]. By this, a marble gravestone with an Inscription in Saxon letters, now almost illegible: “ Hic jacet Dominus ERS LERS quondam man XI Cujus aīe Deus, Amen.”

The surcoate on the figure is painted blew.²

² This monument of a knight and his lady, under a canopied niche, is figured in Lysons's "Gloucestershire Antiquities:" and the inscription there given is "HIC JACET DOM LAS DE VILLERS QUI OBIT X MENSIS JU II ANNO DOM. XXXIIL. CUJUS ANIME TUR DEUS. AMEN." The date would probably be 1294. In Burton's "Leicestershire," p. 47, he is said to have been the son of Alexander Villers of Brokesby co. Leicester; and, having fought in the Holy Land, to have abandoned the original Arms of his family, Sable, 3 cinquefoils A., adopting the cross of St. George with escallops Or. But in the MS. Cartulary of the Hungerford Family the name is written Valers. According to the ancient Title Deeds of Down Ampney registered in that MS., this manor was given by Edmund Crouchback, second son of Hen. III., to his soldier Nicholas, son of William de Valers by Petronilla de Bynnelar. Aubrey's drawing preserves the Horn slung on the Knight's right side: a rather rare appendage which is not shown in Lysons's engraving.

The Manor of Down Ampney passed about A.D. 1313 to the family of Cusance. In 1374 it was purchased by Sir Thomas Hungerford of Farley Castle, in whose descendants, of the younger house, it continued till the middle of the 17th century, when by the marriage of Bridget, only surviving daughter and heiress of the last Sir Anthony Hungerford, it went to Edmund Dunch of Wittenham co. Berks. It was afterwards bought by Mr. Secretary Craggs in the reign of George I.: and by one of his daughters came to Richard Eliot from whom it has descended to the present owner the Earl of St. German's. There are views of the Church, Manor House, and the fine old Gate-House, in Lysons.

² Aubrey calls the shield, Darell, but seems to have been in doubt. Perhaps it was Burnell: and the "handsome lady kneeling," Margaret (Burnell) wife of Sir Edmund Hungerford the first of the Down Ampney branch of that family. She had seven daughters; and was buried here 1485.

Hee first married Mary the daughter of Sir Richard Barkly, Knight, by whom hee had three sonnes and fower daughters, and afterwards married Anna the daughter of Edward Goddard Esq. Hee dyed the xviii. March in the LXIX yeare of his age, Anno Regni Regis Caroli 10, Anno que Domini 1634."

By the phrase, I believe this epitaph was made by his Clarkes.

Answering to this under the other figure:

"Christus mihi vita."

"Sir Antony Hungerford, Knight, now living, (eldest sonne to this Sir John Hungerford, Knight) was first married to Eliz. Lucy, daughter to Sir Th. ANTHONY PREDY.

DOWN AMPNEY HOUSE.

This is a very noble seate, and situated with great convenience for pleasure and profit. By the house runnes a fine brook, which waters these gallant meadows on the west side, where depasture a great number of cattle:—thirty milk-maydes singing. On the other side is the Cotswold Campania, that the Lord can fly his hawke as soon as he is on horseback. I guess, by the scutcheon in the Hall, (Pl. xli. N) this house to be built about Hen. 8. Over the porch of the house is the coate of Hungerford cut in stone. The Church and parish is in Gloucestershire, but part of the house, viz. part of the Kitchen, and, I think, the Cellar, in Wiltes: and for that it hath a long time been the noble seate of the noble and ancient family of the Hungerfords, I could not omit to insert it here. Mem. They say that the Kitchen, or part of the Kitchen and Cellar, was taken out of the River.

I would have the draught taken of this church and house.

In the Hall which is large and open, the following 24 Shields. [Plates xli, xlii, and xliii, Letters N to MM.]

[The 24 Shields are drawn in Aubrey's MS. with some inaccuracies, and without regard to their proper succession in the Pedigree of the Hungerford Family to which they refer. Without a fresh arrangement, and explanation of each, they would have been unintelligible to the Reader. For the following description therefore the Editor is responsible. An extract from the Hungerford Pedigree is inserted; with references to the different Shields.

Pl. xli N. KING HENRY VIII. impaling QUEEN ANNE BOLEYN, A.D. 1532. Dexter, FRANCE AND ENGLAND quarterly. Sinister, for BOLEYN: Quarterly of 6 pieces. 1. Gules, Three lions pass. gardant O., with a label. 2. ANGOULEME. 3. GUIENNE. These three were Augmentation coats granted to her by Hen. 8, when she was created Marchioness of Pembroke. 4. Quarterly, 1 and 4, ROCHFORD; 2 and 3, BUTLER Earl of Ormond. 5. BROTHERTON. 6. WARREN. See Sandford's "Geneal." p. 487: margin. Her Arms are on a wooden screen in the Choir of King's College Chapel, Cambridge, and in College of Arms "D. 4. Yorkshire," fol. 1. b.

The next six shields refer to the Eldest House of HUNGERFORD. Note: that on all the shields in the Down-Ampney windows the HEYTESBURY quartering precedes that of FITZ-JOHN. Both were adopted by the Hungerfords, having been the Arms of female ancestors, heiresses.

To explain the Shields of Arms formerly in Down-Ampney House. Pl. xli—ii—iii.

- O. HUNGERFORD of Farley Castle impaling HUSSEY. Sir Thomas Hungerford purchaser of both Farley, and Down Ampney. Died 1398. His second wife Joan Hussey.
- P. DITTO impaling PEVERELL. Walter Lord Hungerford K.G., son of Sir Thomas. Died 1449. His first wife, Katharine Peverell.
- Q. DITTO impaling MOLINES. Robert Lord Hungerford and Molines, beheaded 1463. Married Eleanor heiress of William Lord Molines.
- R. DITTO impaling PERCY. Sir Thomas Hungerford Kt. son of the last; married the Lady Anne Percy. He was beheaded in 1469.
- Dexter*. 1. HEYTESBURY. 2. HUNGERFORD (i.e. FITZ-JOHN). 3. BOTREAUX. In the MS., Aubrey in this and the next shield draws in this quarter a lion rampant Gules. This not being known in the Hungerford shields of this early period, it is most likely a mistake for the griffin segreant G. which is frequently used as one of the bearings of the heiress Botreaux. Sinister, PERCY quartering LUCY.
- S. DITTO impaling SANDYS. Walter Lord Hungerford and Heytesbury, great nephew of Sir Thomas last mentioned. Beheaded 1540. His second wife was Alice daughter of William Lord Sandys. Dexter, 1. HEYTESBURY. 2. HUNGERFORD. 3. PEVERELL. 4. BOTREAUX. Sinister, SANDYS.
- The remaining shields refer to Hungerford of Down Ampney, the Second House.
- Pl. xlii. T. HUNGERFORD of Down Ampney, with a crescent: impaling BURNELL. For Sir Edmund Hungerford, second son of Walter Lord Hungerford, K.G. His wife Margaret was daughter and coheir of Sir Edward Burnell. Dexter, 1. HEYTESBURY. 2 and 3. HUNGERFORD. 4. PEVERELL. Sinister, BURNELL quartering BOTETOURT. He died 1484.
- U. DITTO impaling HALLE. Sir Thomas Hungerford eldest son of Sir Edmund. He died 1494. His wife, Christian Halle of Salisbury. Dexter, 1 and 4 HUNGERFORD. 2. BURNELL. 3. BOTETOURT. Sinister, HALLE.
- W. DITTO impaling BLOUNT. Sir John Hungerford, son of Sir Thomas. Died 1524. Married Margaret Blount of Mangotsfield co. Gloucester.
- The three next shields refer to families connected with that of Blount.
- X. HENRY COURTENAY, Earl of Devon and Marquis of Exeter; son of Sir William Courtenay by Katharine daughter of King Edw. IV. Married Gertrude daughter of William Blount Lord Montjoy.

MARSHFIELD.

St. Oswald's Ring. The place of his Martyrdom.

In this parish is a memorable Antiquity, which though in another Countie, viz., Gloucestershire, I cannot let passe. On St. Oswald's Down is a place famous for the Martyrdom of St. Oswald. Vide Lib. B. p. 318.

The ancient and common tradition is that King Oswald was beheaded by Penda King of the Mercians.

Bede, Eccl. Hist. iii. cap. 9.

"Oswald, the most Christian King of the Northumbers, had reigned nine years when he was slaine at that great battle of Maserfelth* of the Pagan people and Pagan king of the Mercians (Penda) by whom also his predecessor (Edwin) was killed, in the thirty-eighth year of his age, on the 5th day of August.^b The miracles of his virtues, after his death, declare his great devotion and faith towards God. For in that very place, where fighting for his country, he was slaine by the Pagans, to this very day cease not to be done cures on infirme men and cattle. Hence it comes to pass, that many carrying away the dust, where his body fell to the ground, and putting it in water, have received much benefitt for their infirmities: which custome so increased, that by little and little, the earth being thus fetched away, there was left a pitt of the depth of a man's height. Many miracles are saied to have been here donne by the dust of the place."

This Monument (St. Oswald's Ring) is about the middle of the Downe on the left hand as you ride from Castle Combe to Marshfield, a few perches from the road Southwards, and about a quarter of a mile from Marshfield. It is a circular Bank about 10 or 12 paces in diameter. Within the Circle is a stone. [See Pl. xxxix. Fig. 583.]

A. The stone on which he kneeled.

B. The stone on which his neck was fastened with two staples, which stone is about 15 inches high. The two black spots are holes whereinto the staple, or the like, was inserted: one of them is yet entire: the other broken out. Thus say the Incolæ, (inhabitants.)

C. ignoratur. (not known.)

D.D.D. The circular bank.

E. The excavated place where they took up the earth to doe cures on man and beast. (See Bede above.)¹

* Maserfelth. Bede's Eccles. Hist. Lib, III. cap. IX. and this is doubtless vitium scriptoris for Maresfelth, campus equestris.

^b Canonized in the Almanack that very day. The 5th Aug. and 28 Feb. are dedicated to him.

^c The middle is excavated. J. A.

¹ Marshfield Down is now enclosed, but in a large field not yet broken up, exactly on the site

Not far from this Antiquitie are some barrows on the Downe: one of them is the greatest that I ever sawe.

Heretofore about 80 years, in my grandfather Lyte's remembrance, this Saint was much implored by the shepherds hereabouts. The country people here, about Wraxhall, Ford, &c., nay as far as Auburne Chace (near Marlborough), at night, when they did penne their sheep in the fold,

"Did pray to God and St. Oswald
"To bring the sheep safe from the fold."

And in the morning, when they let them out,

"Did pray to God and St. Oswald
"To bring the sheep safe to the fold."

mentioned by Aubrey, marked "Tumuli" in the Ordnance map, (on the left of the road between Marshfield "Thorns" and the town,) there is still to be seen a circular earthwork, with a considerable mound in the centre filling up two thirds of the area. The stones have disappeared. Not far off, near a wood called "Kington Thorns," upon the border of the two counties, Wilts and Gloucester, are five or six considerable burial mounds: and about two miles S.W. of Marshfield, near "Beake Down" are some large stones of the kind commonly called "Druidical."

For the honour of being the place of King Oswald's martyrdom there are two or three competitors. Oswestry (Shropshire), formerly Maserfeld, is derived from "Oswald's tree:" and has an "Oswald's well." Winwick (Lancashire) can not only show a similar well, still in high repute; but a spot called Mackerfield. It is stated to have been a favourite residence of the King's; and that its claim to have been the place of his death is not modern, is proved by a curious ancient inscription against the wall of the parish Church. (See this inscription, and the whole question discussed in Baines's "Lancashire, iii. 618.) Mirfield in Yorkshire has little pretension. With respect to Marshfield in Gloucestershire, which no one seems to have thought of before Aubrey, it does not appear whether there was any local tradition there in his time, or whether it was only a passing idea of his own, suggested by the name and appearances. He probably drew his plan from memory, as in the centre he places a pit, whereas in the ring at present to be seen (supposing it to be the same) there is, as above-mentioned, a mound. That a battle between the Kings of Northumbria and Mercia should have been fought so far to the South, seems improbable. He mentions this story again in his MS. "Monumenta Britannica" from which some portions have been borrowed for the present text. Oswald, when Canonized, appears to have become a very popular "King and Martyr:" his name having been frequently given to Monasteries, Churches and Crosses. He was buried at Bardney, co. Lincoln; but in A.D. 909 the relics were removed by Ethelred, Earl of Mercia, and his wife Elfreda daughter of King Alfred, to Gloucester, where under the name of this Saint they founded a Religious House, or revived an older one that had been built in A.D. 660.

The country folk call St. Oswald, St. Twasole.

Mem. In Worcestershire is a Hundred, called Oswald's Lowe; perhaps he was buried there. It is certain that a most rich shrine was dedicated in the Cath. Ch. at Worcester: but that was the shrine of St. Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, not St. Oswald the King.

Mem. Marshfield belonged to the Abbey of Kainsham, not far off in Somersetshire. After the Dissolution, Thos. Earle of Sussex, had it. Ghostlowe bought one part; Webbe bought Ashwick, &c. The Parsonage belongs to New College, in Oxon. Q. If they have other lands, &c. Q. A. Wood, de hoc.¹

¹ Keynsham Abbey of Augustines was endowed c. 1170 by William second Earl of Gloucester (son of Robert surnamed "the Consul" natural son of King Hen. I.) with (inter alia) the Manor of Marshfield. Leland (Itin. vi. 97) mentions the tradition of a Nunnery here, but of this there is no record. The Keynsham Abbey tenants at Marshfield were liable to a small toll at Lacock fair payable to Lacock Abbey. [See a curious charter in "Bowles and Nichols's History," Appendix p. lii.] The Earl of Sussex mentioned by Aubrey was Robert Ratcliffe, a favourite Chamberlain. Being soon sold, the larger part was purchased by John Gorslet (not "Ghostlowe.") One W. Gorslet was lord in 1608: whose daughter and heir was mother to John Harrington Esq. of Kelston. The rest was sold to John Chambers, Thomas Crisp and Nicholas Webb. The Rectory appears to have been granted to New College in 1 and 2 Phil. and Mary, in exchange for a manor at Steplingee in Bedfordshire and another in Essex. [Tanner, 439.]

De Amensuracione pasturæ super Personam de Cristemalforde. [A.D. 1243.]

Memorandum quod anno MCCXLIII. et anno Regni Regis H. III. 27°, in vigiliâ Beati Johannis Baptistæ tulit Michael Abbas Glastoniæ Breve de amensuracione pasturæ super Robertum, Personam de Cristemalforde, quod superoneravit pasturam suam in Cristemalforde et habuit in eâ plura animalia quam habere debuit et consuevit. Et liberavit illud Breve eodem die in Com. Wilteshir apud Wiltone, et cùm Vicecomes audisset Breve, tam dicto Abbati quam dicto Personæ precepit quod venirent ad Cristemalforde super pasturam, scil: in vigiliâ Translacionis Beati Benedicti eodem anno, ad videndam amensuracionem illam et accipiendam quid Justitia illi daret; et idem Vicecomes interim summoneri fecit Milites et alios liberos homines et probos et legales de vicineto illo, et unâ cum illis ad dictam diem in propriâ personâ suâ venit et elegit xij ex ipsis et ipsos per sacramentum quod ipsi in fidelitate suâ dicerent ac notarent quot animalia pertinent ad quamlibet hidam terræ in eâdem villâ: quorum nomina sunt hæc. Radulphus de Sterkeleighe, Willielmus de Crosham, Adam Sturmi, Johannes Lucas, Johannes de Cnapwelle, Henricus de la Boxe, Radulphus de Foxcotâ, Simon de Foxcotâ, Radulphus Ryall, Robertus Mauduit, Adam le Paximinster et Johannes Gefray. Jurati dicunt quod cùm Michael, Abbas Glast., portasset Breve de amensuracione pasturæ super Robertum, Personam de Cristemalforde, et ex eo quod idem Robertus injustè superoneravit pasturam suam, &c. dicunt precisè, Quod ad quamlibet hidam terræ in eâdem villâ pertinent sexdecem boves ad terram excolendam, quatuor vaccæ, ij averia, quinquaginta bidentes, et sex porci. Hæc prædicta pertinent ad unam hidam terræ secundum justam amensuracionem.

Memorand. quod X acræ faciunt I ferdellum. IV ferdella faciunt I virgatam. IV virgatæ I hydam. IV hidæ feodum unum faciunt. This was written in a special note in the margin of the Legier Book.

De Amensuratione pasturæ.

Prædicti Adam Sturmy, Johannes de Cnapwelle, Henricus de la Boxe, Radulphus de Foxcote et alii dicunt, Quod cùm Abbas Glastonie portasset Breve Domini Regis super Will. de Heiweie, Robertum de Bremeleighe, et Alexandrum de Boxe, quod idem W., R., et A., super-oneraverint totam communam pasturæ in Cristemalforde, ita quod in eâ plura animalia et pecora habuerint, quam in eâ debuerunt, &c. dicunt, Quod ad unam virgatam terræ pertinent quatuor boves, et duæ vaccæ, et unum averium, et tres porci, et duodecim bidentes, ad tantam excolendam et sustinendam: Dicunt etiam, Quod si prædicta Persona de Christemalford prædictam communam plenariè habere voluerit dictus Abbas habebit communam per totam terram plenariè. Et si prædictus Robertus Persona totam terram suam clausam et defensam contra dictum Abbatem custodierit, ita quod ipse vel sui heredes de Cristemalforde ingressum non habuerint, benè licebit prædicto Abbati prædictam pasturam contra dictam Personam et heredes suos custodire defensam, nisi inde warrantum sufficiens habuerint, præterquam ad averia iiij., unum afrum, sex bidentes, et duos porcos, quæ omnia prædicta Persona habebit in dictâ pasturâ occasione iiij acrarum prati quas habet extrâ clausum suum, ita scil: quod habeat averia cum averiis, bidentes cum bidentibus, porcos cum porcis. Hæc acta sunt tempore quo Nicholaus de Haversham fuit Vice-comes Wilteshir.

Memorand. quod cùm mota lis esset inter Michaellem Abbatem Glast: et Robertum Personam de Cristmalforde super Amensuracionem pasturæ, eò quod dictus R: Persona superoneravit communam dictæ pasturæ, unde dicta pastura admensurata est per xij liberos et legales homines de vicineto de Cristemalford, tandem conquievit lis inter eos in hunc modum, viz. Quod prædictus Abbas habeat in prædictâ pasturâ de Christemalford ad quamlibet hidam terræ ejusdem manerii sexdecim boves ad terram suam excolendam, et quatuor vaccas, duas affras quinquaginta bidentes, et sex porcos; et prædicta Persona habeat eundem numerum secundum porcionem terræ suæ, ubique cum averiis Domini Abbatis in dicto manerio; viz. boves cum bobus, vaccas cum vaccis, bidentes cum bidentibus, porcos cum porcis, et affras cum affris: Ita quod dicta Persona aperiat omnia clausa sua in Cristmalford tempore pasturæ, et tempore stipulæ; et prata post fœnum asportatum de prato ipsius, ad pascendum cum averiis ipsius Abbatis secundum Amensuracionem prædictam sine contradictione ipsius Personæ; et eodem modo dictus R. Persona habeat in pasturâ ipsius Abbatis. In testim', uni parti hujus scripti residenti penes Michaellem Abbatem prædictus R. sigillum suum apposuit. His testibus Adam de la Mare, Johanne de Estone, Philippo de Cerne, Radulpho de Foxcote, et aliis.

Placita de jure et assisâ, capta apud Wilton in Com. Wilteshire in crastino Sancti Hilarii anno regni Regis Henr : III. 52°. [A.D. 1267.]

Jurati venerunt recognituri utrum unum messuagium et xij acræ terræ cum pertinenciis in Grutelington fuerint libera elemosina pertinens ad ecclesiam de Grutelington unde Nicholaus de Turri est Persona, an laicum feodum Rogeri Le Chapman, unde idem Nicholaus dicit quod quidam Johannes le Clerke predecessor suus, Persona predictæ ecclesiæ, fuit in seisinâ de prædictis messuagiis et terris tempore Regis Henrici avi Domini Regis qui nunc est, ut de jure suæ ecclesiæ predictæ, &c. et quod messuagium et terram Rogerus le Chapman tenet, et ipse non venit, et alias fecit default postquam fuit summonitus, ita quod preceptum fuit Vice-comiti resummonere, &c. et Vic : testatur quod resummonitus esset, ideo capit jura versus eum pro default. &c.

Eadem jurata per eosdem ven. recognituri utrum decem virgatæ terræ cum pertinenciis in Grutelington sint libera elemosina pertinens ad eandem ecclesiam de Grutelington unde idem Nicholaus est Persona, an laicum feodum Johannis de Wintershull et Johannæ uxoris ejus ; et unde idem Nicholas dixit quod Johannes le Clerke predecessor suus, Persona dictæ ecclesiæ, fuit seisitus de prædictis decem virgatis terræ cum pertinenciis tempore, &c. et quas decem virgatas terræ prædictus Johannes de Wintershulle et Johanna uxor ejus tenent ; et ipsi non venerunt et alias fecerunt default. postquam fuerunt summoniti, ita quod prescript. fuit Vic. quod resum. eos, &c. et Vic. dicit quod summoniti sunt, ideo capit jura versus eum pro default. &c.

Jurat. dicunt quod predicta ecclesia de Grutelington, tempore, &c. et etiam ante tempus Henrici avi, fuit in seisinâ de predicto messuagio et de predictis xij acris terræ cum pertinenciis unde secunda jura' arraiata esset, ut de liberâ elemosinâ pertinente ad ecclesiam prædictam unde idem Nicholaus est Persona, et dicit quod quidam Johannes le Gros, qui tempore Henrici prædicti avi Domini Regis fuit Persona dictæ ecclesiæ, tempore Domini Hen : Regis alienavit prædictam terram et eam dedit Willielmo Ludington in maritagio cum quâdam filiâ ipsius Johannis le Gros, et idem Willielmus dedit postea prædictam terram cum pertinenciis cuidam Ricardo le Dol in maritagio cum quâdam filiâ ipsius Willielmi ; et unde dicunt per sacramentum suum quod predictum messuagium et predictæ xij acræ terræ cum pertinenciis in Grutelington . . . unde prima jura', et etiam predictæ x virgatæ terræ cum pertinenciis in prædictâ villâ unde secunda jura' arraiata esset, sunt in liberâ elemosinâ partium ad predictam ecclesiam et semper fuerunt - - - dictam alienacionem. Et ideò consideratum est quod prædictus Nicholaus recuperet seisinam suam de præfatis messuagiis et terris ut jure ecclesiæ suæ prædictæ, et prædictus Rogerus le Chapman, Johannes de Wintershull, et Johanna uxor ejus in misericordiâ.

Hiis testibus consencientibus quorum nomina inferius scripta cernuntur. ✠ Ego Athelredus Rex Anglorum hujus donacionis libertatem regni totius fastigium tenens libenter concessi. ✠ Ego Dunstan Archiepiscopus Dorovernensis Ecclesiæ cum signo Sanctæ Crucis confirmavi. ✠ Ego Oswald Eboracensis civitatis archipresul Crucis taumate annotavi.

XV. [Page 140.] SWINLEY, LANGLEY AND CLAPCOTE.

Recognitio Jordani Fitzurse de Servizio suo. A.D. 1243.

Noverint, &c. quod ego Jordanus filius Ursi et heredes mei tenemur Domino Michaeli Abbati Glastoniæ et ecclesiæ Glastoniæ in xl solidos esterlingorum ad duos terminos solvend', viz. ad festum Sancti Michaelis MCCXLIII xx*, et ad Natale Domini proximò sequens xx*, de scutagio sibi debito de uno feodo militis et dimidio feodi quæ teneo de Honore Glastoniæ in Langeleghe, Clopcote, et Swineleghe, unde priùs solvi eidem Abbati xx* de eodem scutagio et adhuc restant xx* de scutagio scilicet concesso Domino Regi Henrico filio R. Johannis quando transfretavit in Vasconiam anno regni ipsius xxvi^o: et ad istam solutionem terminis prænotatis plenariè faciendam me et heredes meos firmiter obligavi et ejusdem Abbatis districtionem subivi. In cujus rei testimonium sigillum meum apposui.

XVI. [Page 140.]

Processus quomodo Jordanus Filius Ursi recognovit feodum militis et dimidio in Swinleghe, Clopcote, et Langlegh. A.D. 1243.

Memorandum quod MCCXLIII Michael (de Ambresbury) Abbas Glaston: fecit distringere Adam et Roisiam de Clopcot per ballivos suos de Kington, ad solvendum ei scutagium de feodo unius militis quod ipsi tenent de Honore Glastoniæ, in Clopcote, et Swineleghe, de scutagio, viz. concesso Domino regi ad transfretacionem suam in Vasconiam anno ipsius Regis xxvj^o; et cùm distringerentur prædicti Adam et Roisia venerunt et ostenderunt se solvisse dictum scutagium de feodo predicto Jordano Filio Ursi de Langeleghe, et quod illud feodum de eodem tenent immediatè; et ipse Jordanus de Abbate Glastoniæ. Postea venit Abbas et distringere facit ipsum Jordanum ad solvendum scutagium prædictum de eodem feodo et de dimidio feodi quod ipse Jordanus tenet in dominico in Langlegh in manerio de Kington. Et cùm distringeretur, venit et interrogavit namia sua quieta, asserens se non teneri eidem Abbati in ipso scutagio sicut ab eo idem exigit, et cum Abbas non dimitteret namia sua quieta, statim ivit ad Nicholaum de Haversham tunc Vicecom' Wilteshir, et questus est de ipso Abbate quod injustè, &c., namia sua detinuit, et dedit vadium et plegios prosequendi versus Abbatem de vi et de namio, et ita deliberari fecit namia sua, et idem vicecomes summoneri fecit Abbatem per ballivum suum de Damerham, quod veniret ostensurus "quare," &c., et intervenientibus rationalibus dilationibus tandem comparuit idem Abbas apud Wilton in vigil. S^t. Joh: Bapt: eodem anno, et idem Jordanus comparuit per Jordanum, filium suum, quem fecit attornatum suum ad lucrandum vel perdendum: et idem Abbas obtulit se versus per seipsum. Et cùm dictus Jordanus attornatus patris sui requisitus esset semel, secundò, et tertio, quid diceret versus dictum Abbatem, nihil respondit, et facto intervallo adhuc sæpius requisitus nihil respondit, sed tandem fatebatur se nolle prosequi versus ipsum. Et ideo consideratum est quod Abbas habeat returnum de namiis dicti Jordani quæ deliberata erant per Vic' viz. xxv animalibus; et quod Jordanus et plegii sui in misericordiâ. Et postea cùm præ-dicta namia returnata fuissent in parcum prædicti Abbatis, venit dictus Jordanus et recognovit se teneri ecclesiæ Glaston: in dicto scutagio unius feodi militis, quod prædictus Adam et Roisia de eo tenent in Swineleghe et Clopcote, et in scutagio dimidio feodi militis quod idem Jordanus tenet in dominico in Langleghe de Abbate Glastoniæ, et ita statim intravit in solucionem.

 Kington. A.D. 1270.*

Noverint, &c. quod cùm Willielmus la Wayte de Chippenham peteret per duo Brevia Domini Regis quod Robertus Abbas Glaston permitteret ei habere iiij exitus versus boscum ipsius Abbatis de Haywode in manerio suo de Kington per medium quoddam fossatum quod est inter boscum prædictum et quasdam croftas quas habet prædictus Willielmus de tenemento quod fuit aliquando Willielmi de Haywode, ut posset habere cheminum ad carriandum blada sua, &c: tandem amicabiliter convenitur inter eos festo St. Michaelis Anno Dñi. MCCLXX. et anno Regni Regis Henrici filii Regis Johannis LIIII°. viz. quod predictus Willielmus remisit, &c. quod duo medii exitus clausi et obstructi remaneant in perpetuum, et pro hâc concessione Abbas, &c. concessit quod predictus Willielmus et heredes habeant in perpetuum duos exitus tantum versus boscum predictum per medium predicti fossati, viz. unum exitum de Croftâ que vocatur ‘La Wyke’ et alium exitum de Croftâ quam Walterus de Haywode olim tenuit de prædicto Willielmo de Haywode. Testibus Domino Galfrido Foliot, Johanne de Estone, Sampson de la Boxe, militibus, Ric: Horne, Martino de Pedeworth, et aliis.

XXIV. RECTORY OF KINGTON ST. MICHAEL. [Page 142.]

A.D. 1251—1261.] Carta Jordani Cotel, Personæ de Kington, de unâ acrá in eodem manerio non alienandú.

Omnibus ad quos, &c. Jordanus Cotel, Rector ecclesiæ de Kington, salutem. Noverint universitas vestra quod ego Jordanus me obligavi pro me et heredibus meis Domino Rogero Abbati Glastoniæ quod nec ego nec heredes mei unquam dabimus, vendemus, vel aliquo modo assignabimus, alicui domui religiosæ, seu alicui ecclesiæ, seu Personæ alicui ecclesiæ, illam acram terræ in Kington quam habui de Wilhelmo de Haywode, quæ est de feodo ipsius Abbatis, sine expresso consensu dictorum Abbatis et Conventus. In cujus rei testimonium præsentī scripto sigillum meum apposui. Iiis testibus; Domino Thoma Trevet, Wilhelmo filio suo, Roberto de Brete, Hugone de Middleton, et aliis.

[A.D. 1269.] Indentura facta inter Abbatem Glastoniæ et Rectorem Ecclesiæ de Kington, de standâ ordinacione bonorum virorum super quâdam plateâ propè fabricam quæ nunc est curtilagium.

Memorandum quod cùm die Beati Dionysii anno Domini millesimo CC sexagesimo nono Jordanus, Rector Ecclesiæ de Kington, diceret se esse gravatum in quâdam plateâ propè fabricam quæ aliquando fuit pundfolda Abbatis Glastoniæ quæ nunc reducta est in curtilagium, et de duobus averiis suis quos idem Abbas ei deforceat ut dicit, convenit amicabiliter inter eosdem Abbatem et Rectorem quod de communi consensu posuerunt se in consideratione bonorum virorum hinc inde communiter eligendorum. In cujus rei testimonium præsentī scripto in modum chirographi confecto prædictus Abbas et Jordanus sigilla sua alternatim apposuerunt. Iiis testibus Michael le Goy, Durando de Wullavingtone, Waltero la Wayte et aliis. Acta apud Melles die et anno supradicto.

Memorandum; quod die et anno supradicto Jordanus Cotele, Rector Ecclesie de Kington, tulisset duo Brevia Domini Regis super Dominum Robertum Abbatem Glastoniæ, unum, viz.; de novâ disseisinâ, per quod conquerebatur quod quidam Abbas disseisiavit eum de communâ pasturæ suæ quam habere debuit, ut dicebat, ad omnimoda averia sua in bosco prædicti Abbatis quod vocatur Inwode in Kington, et quod predictus Abbas levare fecerat tres domos in Kington et unam domum in Langeleghe in communâ pasturæ suæ, ut dicebat; et quod obstrui fecerat iter quod habere consuevit, ut dixit, inter Inwode et la sterte (stream): et aliud Breve per quod conquerebatur quod idem levare fecerat sex fossata in Kington ad nocumentum liberi tenementi sui in eadem villâ; Tandem contentiones amicabiliter conquieverunt in formâ subscriptâ, viz. quod prædictus Abbas concessit præfato Rectori quod ipse habeat porcos suos proprios sine numero in prænotato bosco prædicti Abbatis de Inwode simul cum porcis ipsius Abbatis quando-cunque et quoties-cunque idem Abbas vel ballivi sui porcos suos in dictum boscum poni fecerint: ita tamen quod porci memorati Rectoris quos ibi sic ponet, intrent vel exeant per mediam curiam prædicti Abbatis et non alibi. Promisit enim dictus Abbas dicto Rectori bonâ fide quod nec per se nec per ballivos suos per fraudem vel per maliciam excogitatam, quod absit, aliquod impedimentum præstabit quominus porci prædicti Rectoris in præfatum boscum ingressum habeant, et egressum in formâ prædictâ. Concessit etiam memoratus Abbas præfato Rectori, quod habeat iter quod habere consuevit apud "la sterte" ad bigam et quadrigam, absque ullo impedimento sui vel suorum; ita tamen quod liceat prædicto Abbati sepem et clausum facere inter dictum iter et culturam suam quam habet in eodem ambitu clausi de "la sterte" tempore quo fuerit seminata. Et cum segetes inde amotæ fuerint supradictus Rector cum averiis suis simul cum averiis prædicti Abbatis absque contradictione vel impedimento quolibet communicet ibidem. Et pro hâc concessione remisit totaliter dictus Rector præfato Abbati omnimodam communam pasturæ quam ad se pertinere dicebat ad quæcunque averia sua in dicto bosco de Inwode, salvâ eidem Rectori communâ in bosco ipso ad porcos suos proprios tantummodo in formâ premissâ. Remisit insuper idem Rector præfato Abbati omnem actionem quam habuit et demandam versus prædictum Abbatem de prænominatis 4 domibus quas dixit esse erectas in communâ pasturæ suæ, et de predictis sex fossatis quæ ad nocumentum suum levata esse dicebat in predictis villis de Kington et Langeleghe. In cujus rei testimonium, &c. Hiis testibus (scil: prædictis).

Sciant, &c. quod Ego Reginaldus Bosket consensu et assensu Herberti Frankchivaler domini mei et Julianæ filiæ ipsius uxoris meæ concessi Deo et Ecclesiæ S. Mariæ Glastoniæ totam terram meam de la Combe et Langeleyghe quam accepi cum uxore meâ in maritagium, tenendam in perpetuum liberè et quietè de me et heredibus meis. Reddendo inde annuatim mihi et heredibus meis tres solidos pro omni servitio ad me pertinente. Et si forte Regale servicium vel aliud evenierit de hiis tribus solidis illud servicium semper fiet. Pro hac concessione Rogerus filius Edine dedit mihi Reginaldo Bosket decem solidos et Julianæ uxori meæ xij denarios, et Thomæ heredi meo xij^d et Herberto Frankchivaler xij solidos; pro speciali siquidem dilectione prædicti Rogeri Monachi jam dictæ ecclesiæ Glastoniæ fecimus concessionem prædictam. Et ut hæc mea donatio rata et inconcussa imposterum permaneat scripto meo et sigilli mei munimine eam confirmavi. Hiis testibus, Aluredo Ferling, Thoma de Monte, Roberto Mareschall, et aliis.

Regnante imperpetuo Domino Jhu Christo. Sacræ autem Scripture edita forma catholicorum patrum nos admonet ut memores simus quàm quidem transeuntis mundi vicissitudo cotidie per incrementa temporum crescendo decrescat et ampliando minuatur, crebrescentibusque repentinis variorum incursum ruinis vicinus finis terminus esse cunctis in proximo cernitur. Idcirco vanis et transibilibus rebus mansura cœlestis patriæ præmia mercanda sunt. Quapropter Ego Edmundus Rex Anglorum cæterarumque gentium in circuitu persistentium gubernator et rector, cuidam meo fidei ministro vocitato nomine Wulfrico, ob illius amabile obsequium ejusque placabilem fidelitatem, dignatus sum impartiri bis denas mansas, quod Anglicè dicitur "Twenti hide," ubi barbarum collatione jamdudum nomen illatum hoc esse profertur "at Netlingtone." Hæc igitur præfata tellus omnibus cum appendiciis silvis et campis pascuis atque pratis magnis vel minimis sit quoque liber libertate præfixâ ab omni jugo servili cum universis quæ pertinent sibi, tribus pretermisiss non obmittendis, expedicione, pontis municionisque confectione; deinceps namque sibi succedenti, cui placuerit sibi, relinquat heredi in eternam hereditatem. Nam quisquis seculorum in generatione Belial gnatus nostrum hoc volumen immutare temptaverit, inde reus celere judicii die, magnâ cum turmâ, truces tradatur in flammâ, nisi hoc in seculo penitentiæ prius fletu deterius hinc se corrigere studuerit. Istis terminis predicta terra circumgirata esse videtur. "Erest endlang ye fer to Alorbroke, endlang Alorbokes to Wodeforde, of Wodeforde to Streteforde, of Streteforde to Meredich, up of Meredich, out to bilham that hit comet to lang-forlang suthward, thanen to Hengrave, of Hengrave to Cefe-landgrave, thanen to Abbanberghe to than or-putten to the fer ist stone." ✠ Acta est hæc prefata donacio anno ab incarnatione Domini nostri Jesu Christi DCCCCXLIII. indictione secundâ. ✠ Ego Edmundus rex Anglorum prefatam donationem cum sigillo Sanctæ Crucis subaravi. ✠ Ego Odo Dorobern ecclesie archiepiscopus ejusdem regis donacionem cum sigillo sanctæ Crucis confirmavi, cum multis aliis. Hanc ruralem possessionem prædictus Wulfricus post obitum conjugis suæ datâ cartulâ commendavit, quod tum Elswin factus Monachus et ad monasterium rediens opere implevit. Carta Regis Edwy facta de Netelington Abbati et Monasterio de Glastonbury.

salvâ expeditione et pontis arcisve constructione. Sic verò maneat predictum rus defensum ab omni obstaculo et liberum à cuncto servicio, exceptis istis tribus sicut superiùs prænотatum est. Si quis autem, quod non optamus, infringere temptaverit, quod absit, sciat se rationem redditurum coram Deo et angelis ejus nisi prius hic dignâ satisfactione emendare voluerit. Acta est hæc præfata donacio anno ab incarnatione Domini Nostri Jesu Christi DCCCCLVI, indictione xiiij. ♣ Ego Edwy Rex Anglorum indeclinabiliter consensi. ♣ Ego Edgar ejusdem Regis frater celeriter consensi. ♣ Ego Odo archiepiscopus cum signo sanctæ Crucis roboravi: cum multis aliis.

Additions, and Errata observed.

- Page 20, Note, line 24. To the quartering No. 7, (Az. a fess between three fleurs de lis Or) add, "SHELTON."
 ,, 28, line 11. For "MOWBRAY" read "SIR WILLIAM FITZ ALAN alias ARUNDELL K.G."
 ,, 56, Note, RUDLOW. This manor has lately been purchased by T. H. A. Poynder Esq., of Hartham Park.
 ,, 57, Note 3. For "BEKE" read "BECKE."
 ,, 66, line 5. For "Oxenwood" read "Oxenden."
 ,, 78, Note 2, line 3 from bottom. The Latin word in the original deed is certainly Vivarium.
 ,, 79, line 17. For "Smythe quartering Judde," read "Smythe impaling Judde."
 ,, CORSHAM. Some portion of the Manor then held of the Queen Dowager was leased for 21 years to Sir James Long of Draycote and Dorothy his wife, 17th June, 17 Charles II. (A.D. 1665).
 ,, 93, line 12. For "Abbot?" read perhaps STEWKELEY. See below, Plate ix.
 ,, 119, line 4. For "CARTER" read "CATER."
 ,, 152, Note, line 15. John Potenger, Controller of the Pipe, was not buried at Highworth, but at Broad Blunsdon in the parish of Highworth. A Memoir of him by C. W. Bingham, M.A. was published in 24mo, 1841.
 ,, 177. In the shield No. 258, the 4th quartering is perhaps Beauchamp of Hache.
 ,, 180, line 12. No. 271 erase "PIGOR." See below, Plate xvi.
 ,, 199, line 1. For "No. 286 and PAVEY No. 287" read "No. 286 PAVEY, and No. 287."
 ,, 208, Note 2. The "Brykelsworth" given to the Church of Old Sarum was not Brinkworth in Wilts, but Brixworth, co. Northampton.
 ,, 240, line 17. For An. Dom. "1633," read "1630."
 ,, 243, line 3. After "Lance," insert "[No. 356]."
 ,, 267, end of Note 2. WHITCHURCH belonged, at his death in 1643, to Henry Danvers Earl of Danby mentioned in p. 224. It has been recently purchased (1861) by the Rev. Mr. Elwell, Rector of Dauntsey.
 ,, 296, line 7. Add the reference to the arms "[POORE, Pl. xxix. No. 435]."
 ,, 344, line 2. Add, "[Pl. xxxii. No. 448]."
 ,, 361, line 5. The coat "like Chamberlayne's" was perhaps CHEDIOCK.
 ,, 383, line 9. In the shield No. 497, Pl. xxxiv, the first quartering, "Ludlow of Shropshire" was probably drawn wrong by Aubrey, and ought to have been the same as the sixth quartering in the same shield, viz. Ludlow of Maiden Bradley.
 ,, 387, Note 3: and p. 388, line 1. The dexter of the shield No. 511, Pl. xxxv, is not "Mowbray:" but "Sir William Fitzalan alias Arundell K.G.: quartering Maltravers."
 ,, 392, Note, line 3. For "B.D." read "A.D."
 ,, 398, Note. It should have been explained that the Warminster, or Wormister, connected with the Prebend of Wells Cathedral is a small place two and a half miles South East of the city of Wells. It is mentioned, as "Worminster," near the foot of p. 2.
 ,, 400, under "[565]," add, "[566. ROBERT LORD WILLOUGHBY K.G.]"

Corrigenda in the Plates.

- Plate iii. No. 30. For "Mowbray" read "Fitz-Alan."
 ,, ,, No. 42. Erase "Earl of Warwick." The stone shield, being thickly covered with lime-wash, was mistaken by Aubrey and the drawing is wrong. It should be a Lion rampant, holding in his paws a baton, as mentioned in p. 35, Note. 1.
 ,, vii. Nos. 120, 121. Erase the words "SOUTH WINDOW," over these two shields.
 ,, ix. No. 149. The quartering marked [Abbot?] may be Stewkeley; a coat which is impaled with Baynard on a monument in the Lackham Aisle in Lacock Church.
 ,, xvi. No. 271. This shield is indistinctly drawn by Aubrey. As drawn in the Plate it is not the coat of Pigot. Perhaps it is Brewes.
 ,, xvii. Shield 299. The quartering No. 11 is perhaps Willoughby.
 ,, xxiii. Shield 366. Name "FORTE."
 ,, xxxv. No. 511. For "Mowbray" read "Fitz Alan."
 ,, xxxvi. No. 545. For "Gore" read "Morgan."
 ,, xxxviii. No. 574. The crest of Wadman should be; the demi-eagle Ermine, the wings extended Gules.
